Mr. Clappison: EC directive 85/203/EEC on air quality standards for nitrogen dioxide sets a mandatory limit value and two non-mandatory guide values for nitrogen dioxide. The latter two are 135μg/m^3 (70.6ppb) expressed as a 98th percentile, and 50μg/m^3 (26.2ppb) expressed as a 50th percentile, both of hourly values over a year.

The table lists the sites of the national monitoring network and the years where either of these guide values has been exceeded.

Mr. Roy Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to implement the recommendation of the Government's expert panel on air quality standards for a standard for ozone of 50ppb. [3125]

Mr. Clappison: The Government's national air quality strategy, which we intend to publish within the next few months, will include objectives for particular air pollutants, including zone, and the steps which we will expect local authorities and others to take in order to meet them.

About half the ozone affecting the UK has its origins abroad. Therefore, the UK believes that the most sensible approach is to act internationally to reduce emissions of the precursors of ozone. The United Kingdom has already signed the United Nation economic commission for Europe protocol on the reduction of volatile organic compounds, and is currently preparing for the negotiation of a new agreement on the reduction of oxides of nitrogen.

EU Research and Development Budget

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the indicative contributions to the EU budget in respect of research and development for his Department in 1993–94. [1907]

Mr. Clappison: Table 2.1 of the statistical supplement to the "Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology 1995" contains indicative figures for the United Kingdom's contributions to the EC budget in respect of research and development. Departments' policy responsibilities are subject to change and can vary from year to year. My Department currently has responsibility for 8.04 per cent. of the Community's R and D budget.

Climate Change

Mr. Mathew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the next report from the intergovernmental panel on climate change has been sent to his Department for comment; what is the timetable for its publication; and if he will make a statement. [1814]

Mr. Clappison: The reports of the three working groups of the intergovernmental panel on climate change were sent to my Department for comment following extensive scientific peer review. Comments were sought from other Departments and, where appropriate, external experts. Comments were provided on early drafts and as input to discussion at plenary sessions of the working groups.

The summary reports of working groups II and III of IPCC were approved last month in Montreal and the working group I report will be addressed at a meeting on 27 to 29 November in Madrid. All three summaries and the underlying reports are due to be accepted formally by the IPCC at its plenary session in Rome in December. An overall synthesis report will also be considered for approval in Rome.

Final published forms of the full reports should be available in spring 1996.

Asbestos (Building Demolition)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what obligations there are for an organisation or person demolishing a building that is known to contain asbestos to report to a local authority that it is their intention to demolish such a building; and if he will make a statement. [1703]

Mr. Clappison: Any organisation or individual intending to demolish certain types of buildings is required to notify the local authority of their intention to do so. Buildings covered by this requirement are listed in section 80 of the Building Act 1984.

The local authority may respond to the notice by imposing conditions on the demolition work including removal of material or rubbish from the site and measures for the protection of the public and preservation of public amenity. Depending on the nature of the conditions, the organisation or individual must notify the local authority again 24 or 48 hours before the required action is taken.

For buildings containing asbestos, additional requirements depend on the nature and position of the asbestos in the building. If the building contains asbestos insulation or coating this should be removed wherever possible before any other demolition work begins. Such removal should be undertaken only by contractors licensed under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983.

Inland Waterways (Speed Limits)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons he has given advice that speed limits on inland waterways shall henceforth be notified in kilometres per hour; what consultations were made prior to such notification; what is its statutory basis; and to what rivers, canals or tidal waterways such advice applies. [1797]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Under the Units of Measurement Regulations 1995, which took effect from 1 October 1995, certain references to imperial units of measurement were converted to their metric equivalent. My Department had kept British Waterways and the National Rivers Authority informed on the proposed regulations. The regulations apply to all waterways except those used for sea transport, where units of measurement are laid down in international conventions or agreements.

Assured Shorthold Tenancies

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many cases have been referred by tenants of assured shorthold tenancies to rent assessment committees in each year since the introduction of the Housing Act 1988; how many determinations have been made as a result of such referrals; and what has been the average reduction of rent consequent on those determinations; [2406]

(2) in how many cases involving referrals by tenants of assured shorthold tenancies under section 22 of the Housing Act 1988, in each year since the introduction of that Act, the rent assessment committee declined to make a determination (a) on the grounds that there were insufficient similar lettings in the locality and (b) because the rent was not considered significantly higher than that which the landlord might reasonably be expected to obtain. [2405]

Mr. Curry: The number of referrals by tenants of assured shorthold tenancies under section 22 of the Housing Act 1988 in each year since the introduction of that Act and action taken by the committees is as follows:

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	[1]1995
Number of referrals	166	423	638	765	994	1,583	1,520
Number of determinations	33	77	237	240	284	444	519
Average rent reduction (pa)(£)[2]	813	979	763	728	834	1,359	1,246
Number of determinations declined (insufficient similar lettings)	22	14	15	10	16	8	3
Number of determinations declined (rent not significantly high)	36	129	144	173	194	378	424

Determinations may also be declined on the grounds that the Committee has no jurisdiction to make a determination and where a referral has been withdrawn.

[1] To date.

[2] These exclude the London and South Western committees where the figures were unavailable.

My Department's consultation paper "The Legislative Framework for Private Renting" issued in June 1995, proposed to repeal the right of assured shorthold tenants to refer to committees for a rent determination under section 22 of the Housing Act 1988. In the light of responses to that paper, I have decided to retain this right of referral.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total number of tenants in assured shorthold tenancies who have been receiving housing benefit in each year since the introduction of the Housing Act 1988; and how many of these have had their rents determined by a rent assessment committee. [2407]

Mr. Curry: The estimated number of tenants in assured shorthold tenancies in England receiving housing benefit is as follows:

1989: figures not available

1990: 25,000

1991–92: figures not available

1992–93: figures not available

1993–94: 300,000

1994–95: 300,000

These estimates are from the 1990 private renters survey and the survey of English housing. Like all estimates from sample surveys, they are subject to sampling error.

Tenants seeking a rent determination by a rent assessment committee are not required to inform the committee whether they are in receipt of housing benefit.

Toxic Waste Shipments

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what permits his Department has issued to allow the shipment of toxic waste into Liverpool in the last five years; and what quantities of toxic waste have entered the port in this period. [2135]

Mr. Clappison: Day-to-day administration of controls over imports and exports of waste is the responsibility of waste regulation authorities. Authorisation of hazardous waste imports is a matter for the waste regulation authority for the area where the destination facility is located. This may not be the same as the authority for the port of entry.

The following table shows the quantities of hazardous waste entering the United Kingdom through the port of Liverpool since 1989:

Year	Tonnes[1]
1989–90	754
1990–91	573
1991–92	1,362
1992–93	1,081
1993–94	4,566

Digest of Environmental Statistics, Nos. 13–17, HMSO.

No imports of hazardous wastes were notified for disposal at facilities within the jurisdiction of Merseyside waste regulation authority during this period.

Housing Bill

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will incorporate measures in the forthcoming housing Bill to remedy problems confronting leaseholders. [2403]

Mr. Curry: I am aware of the concerns which have been expressed. We are considering the possibility of framing appropriate measures.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what parliamentary timetable he envisages for the forthcoming Housing Bill; and if it is his intention that it will include measures relating to construction contracts. [2404]

Mr. Curry: We are finalising legislation to make better provision for housing and to lay the foundations for a construction industry based on partnership and co-operation, and hope to publish it shortly.

Planning Guidance (Shopping Centres)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his new planning guidance on shopping centres. [2867]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We hope to publish the revised PPG6 early next year.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (Scotland)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the criteria used for selecting companies to be placed on the long list of contractors suitable for selection as network installers under the home energy efficiency scheme in Scotland; [2119]

(2) what was the value of work carried out under the home energy efficiency scheme by each network installer in Scotland in the latest year for which figures are available; [2120]

(3) who are the network installers used under the home energy efficiency scheme for each region in Scotland. [2132]

Mr. Clappison: All applicants for the long list are selected by competitive tender. Applicants are required to demonstrate their willingness and continuing ability to meet specified performance standards for grant work set by Eaga Ltd. and approved by my right hon. Friend. They are also required to carry out work sensitively with proper regard to the needs of clients; and to operate in accordance with Eaga's code of conduct.

The same criteria are applied in England and Wales.

Information about the value of work of individual installers is commercially confidential. A breakdown for 1994–95 by geographical area is shown in table 1. Table 2 shows the installers operating in each area.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his plans for local government revenue spending in 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [2796]

Mr. Gummer: Every year, the Government announce the sum of money which local authorities are expected to spend. Next year's figure is £44.92 billion, up

3.3 per cent. on last year. This means an increase of £1.4 billion, and when the transitional costs of local government reorganisation are taken into account, represents a cash improvement of 3.1 per cent.

In allocating this sum between services, I have decided to give the main priority to education. My proposal is therefore that education spending should increase year on year by 4.5 per cent. The amount actually spent on schools remains a matter for individual local authorities, but I have no doubt that parents, governors and teachers will wish to ensure that the whole of the increased funding feed through into schools' budgets.

I propose that the level of aggregate external finance distributed to local authorities in 1996–97 should be £35.62 billion. This represents an increase of some £960 million—2.8 per cent.—compared with this year's figure.

I also propose that the national non-domestic rate poundage for 1996–97 should rise to 44.9, reflecting the annual increase in the retail price index to September.

I propose to set the distributable amount of non-domestic rates at £12.74 billion. I propose that the total of revenue support grant should be £18 billion. Special and specific grants within AEF will amount to £4.88 billion.

I shall announce shortly my proposals for the distribution of Government grants, including my proposals for changes in the standard spending assessment methodology. At the same time, I shall announce my capping intentions.

It is essential that local and central government continue to play their part in restraining expenditure. My proposals for total standard spending, aggregate external finance and the non-domestic rate poundage represent a balanced approach to funding the demands on local authority services in 1996–97.

I look to local authorities to scrutinise their priorities and to take every opportunity to increase their cost efficiency in the delivery of services. If they do so then, even in the climate of a tight settlement, the provision I have announced will enable authorities to meet priority needs across the range of their functions.

Advisory Committee on Protection of the Sea

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what period his Department will continue funding the Advisory Committee on Protection of the Sea. [2652]

Mr. Clappison: My Department currently provides support to the Advisory Committee on Protection of the Sea through the environmental action fund. ACOPS has applied for further funding for the financial year 1996–97. My Department is considering this, along with all other requests for environmental action fund support and we hope to announce our decisions on all applications early in 1996.

Rebuilding Grants

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the results of the pilot project for rebuilding grants carried out under the terms of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. [3097]

Mr. Clappison: We expect to publish the results of the study early in the new year.

Social Housing

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to ensure equality in terms of competition and regulation as between housing associations and the proposed independent social landlords. [2697]

Mr. Clappison: All organisations that wish to receive subsidy from the Housing Corporation to provide social housing will be required to meet the same standards of construction, maintenance, management and services to tenants. The corporation will monitor these organisations to see that these standards are delivered, and will have regulatory powers to take action where standards are not being met.

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the proposals from the National Federation of Housing Associations relating to the proceeds from the sale of the Housing Corporation's loan portfolio; and if he will make a statement. [2786]

Mr. Gummer: The Government will be making a statement on this matter later this afternoon.

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to sell to the private sector the Housing Corporation portfolio of earlier loans to housing associations. [3426]

Mr. Curry: Since 1989, housing associations have secured around £5.5 billion of private resources to support housing projects, and a further £3 billion in support of large-scale voluntary transfers of housing from local authorities.

Prior to 1989, housing associations' loan finance was provided by the Housing Corporation with resources borrowed from the national loans fund. There is no reason for public sector bodies to continue to hold these loans, and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have decided in principle that the corporation's portfolio of loans to housing associations in England, and the equivalent lending in Scotland by Scottish Homes and in Wales by Housing for Wales should be sold, subject to detailed investigations of the options for sale and the prospective disposal receipt. We shall shortly be appointing advisers to carry out this investigation.

Sale, if confirmed following investigation, will not affect the financial position of the housing associations concerned, or their tenants, or rents, or the future development programmes of the Housing Corporation, Scottish Homes or Housing for Wales.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on tax relief grant for non-charitable housing associations. [3427]

Mr. Curry: The White Paper "Our Future Homes" set out the Government's proposals to enable profit-making companies and other bodies to compete alongside housing associations for funds to support the provision of social housing in England and Wales.

In this context, it would not make sense for non-charitable housing associations to continue to receive tax relief grant, which currently offsets their liability for income and corporation tax. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have, therefore, decided that tax relief grant should be discontinued with effect from 1 April 1997, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation.

The tax position of charitable housing associations will remain unchanged.

Stray Dogs

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if a local authority must include on its register of stray dogs information derived from (a) a tattoo, (b) an identification tag or collar and (c) a microchip which is carried by a stray dog; and if he will make a statement. [3425]

Mr. Clappison: The Environmental Protection (Stray Dogs) Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No 288) set out what information a local authority must include in its register of stray dogs. This contains specific mention of information from tattoos, tags and collars, but does not include specific mention of microchips. The local authority must, however, take reasonable steps to include any information which is carried by the dog. The interpretation of these regulations is ultimately a matter for the courts.

DEFENCE

Western European Union

7. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what aims the Government have for their presidency of the Western European Union. [816]

Mr. Portillo: We intend to concentrate our efforts during the United Kingdom presidency on ensuring that the WEU can fulfil more effectively its operational role as the European pillar of the transatlantic alliance.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the issues discussed and decisions taken at the recent Western European Union meeting in Madrid; and if he will place in the Library copies of all Western European Union declarations made in 1995. [1575]

Mr. Soames: The WEU Ministerial Council met in Madrid on 14 November. Ministers approved an options paper prepared as the WEU's contribution to the 1996 intergovernmental conference, and publication of a reflection document entitled "European security: a common concept of the 27 WEU countries". Ministers also took decisions on a range of measures to strengthen the WEU's operational capability, and welcomed a statement by the UK on the programme for its presidency commencing on 1 January 1996, which focuses on the WEU's further operational development. Copies of all 1995 WEU declarations not already in the Library of the House will be placed there.

Trident Programme

14. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the progress of the Trident programme. [824]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Trident programme continues to make good progress and is on time and within budget. The second Vanguard class submarine, HMS Victorious, is due to enter service around the turn of the year.

Joint Defence Policy (USA)

15. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the US Secretary for Defense to discuss joint defence policy. [825]

Mr. Portillo: I last met the US Defence Secretary at the NATO Ministerial meeting at Williamsburg on 6 October. I shall meet him again later this afternoon.

Mr. David Hart

16. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assurances of confidentiality have been provided by Mr. David Hart regarding information supplied to his Department by the United Kingdom defence industry. [826]

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 19 October 1995, Official Report, column 361.

17. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what access Mr. David Hart has to confidential information provided by the British defence industry. [828]

Mr. Portillo: Mr. Hart has access to the information necessary for him to fulfil his duties as my independent adviser.

RAF High Wycombe

18. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of RAF High Wycombe. [829]

Mr. Soames: Although some changes are proposed to the internal structure of RAF Strike Command, RAF High Wycombe will continue to play an important role as the home for HQ RAF Strike Command, HQ Allied Forces North West Europe, and the Franco-British Euro Air Group.

Military Helicopters (Exports)

19. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support his Department provides to assist companies wishing to export military helicopters. [830]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Within the Ministry of Defence, support for defence exports is provided, primarily, by the Defence Export Services Organisation, which exists to help British manufacturers market and sell their products abroad, complementing the wider range of services offered by the Department of Trade and Industry. In addition to the DESO/DTI support, the Export Credits Guarantee Department makes available its range of export credit facilities to support defence sales.

Eurofighter 2000

20. Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the consequences for Eurofighter 2000 of the delay in reaching agreement with European allies on workshare. [832]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A number of aspects, including workshare, relating to the planning of the future phases of the Eurofighter 2000 project are being discussed between the partner Governments. It would be premature to speculate now on the consequences of delay in reaching decisions on these aspects.

Trident Programme

21. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received with regard to the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement. [833]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A number of representations have been received regarding the Trident programme.

RAF Pilot Training

22. Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of advanced RAF pilot training. [834]

Mr. Soames: Advanced RAF fast-jet pilot training will continue to take place at RAF Valley. Multi-engine pilot training is undertaken at RAF Cranwell, but is currently the subject of a trial to explore the feasibility of conducting this activity in the private sector. Rotary wing training will continue to be undertaken at RAF Shawbury, but from April 1997 will be provided by the new tri-service defence helicopter flying school which is to be based at the station.

French Nuclear Testing

23. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart concerning nuclear testing. [836]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Since their meeting in Paris on 27 September, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the French Defence Minister have not discussed nuclear testing.

Empty Service Properties

24. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many empty service properties his Department currently possesses. [837]

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September 1995, my Department owned 13,898 vacant service families quarters. Of these, 3,202 were in the process of being sold while the majority of the remainder were either awaiting major maintenance work, held for unit deployments, already allocated to service families due to move in shortly or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available to house entitled service personnel.

A continuing programme should ensure significant additional disposals of surplus quarters during the next 12 to 18 months.

British-French Air Defence Co-operation

25. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British-French air defence co-operation. [839]

Mr. Soames: Excellent relations exist between the two air forces. This close co-operation was recently demonstrated by the inauguration of the Franco-British Euro Air Group.

Military Air Crashes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all military jet airplane crashes in United Kingdom airspace since 1980 indicating the date and location of each crash or the types of aircraft involved. [2738]

Mr. Soames: The table lists crashes which resulted in category 4 or category 5 damage, or nearest equivalent, to one or both of the military fixed-wing jet aircraft involved:

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to inform hon. Members of proposed low flying exercises. [2230]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 10 February 1995, Official Report, column 463.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to review the conduct of low flying; and if he will make a statement. [2434]

Mr. Soames: The regulations governing the use of the United Kingdom low flying system are kept under continuous review.

Shoeburyness Firing Range (Noise)

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the number of complaints he has received in the current year from Kent residents about (a) noise and (b) vibration from the Shoeburyness firing range; how many exceptionally loud detonations have taken place; what procedures are adopted to reduce inconvenience to the minimum possible; and what is the role of the establishment within the defence strategy. [2439]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Sir Roger Moate, dated 28 November 1995:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about complaints from Kent Residents on the activities at the Shoeburyness range has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) which includes the Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation (DTEO), of which Shoeburyness is a part, as one of its divisions.

You asked about the role of DTEO Shoeburyness. The site has developed over the last 140 years to provide a large land area and firm tidal sands which are used to test, trial and dispose of weapons and munitions for the Ministry of Defence. In more detail there are four main strands of activity.

a. The Dynamic Trials Section conducts a wide variety of trials and proof testing involving guided weapons, tank ordnance and artillery systems. The use of the tidal sands gives the section the capability to observe end trajectory functioning out to 24km.

b. The Static Trials Section conducts a wide range of trials on all explosive items and targets. The section also tests ballistic body armour and explosive suppression techniques.

c. The Environmental Test Centre (ETC) on Foulness Island is the focus of excellence within DTEO Shoeburyness for all matters relating to safe handling, transportation and storage of military and potentially hazardous stores.

d. Shoeburyness is also a world leader in the development of Conventional Munitions Disposal techniques and has developed a modern integrated range of facilities for the safe, efficient and environmentally benign demilitarisation of ammunition and explosives.

The number of complaints in any year is variable depending on the programme of work we have underway for the MOD. The number of complaints has increased since Shoeburyness undertook large scale demilitarisation at the end of 1993 as a result of the UK signing the 1989 Oslo Convention Agreement which banned deep sea dumping of ammunition. The staff at Shoeburyness have taken a number of steps to minimise the effects of noise on the local population. Before any firings take place an acoustic forecast is undertaken which predicts the likely noise effect over the surrounding area. If conditions are such that disturbance might be caused on any one or more centres of population then firings are postponed, where possible, until conditions are more favourable. The acoustic forecast is backed up by a number of noise monitors, three of which are on the Kent coast, which give an accurate, real time, indication of what noise is actually being propagated. If these results show an unacceptable level of noise, then trials or firings are, if possible, postponed until conditions are more favourable. The management at Shoeburyness has also implemented a policy of encouraging local residents to get in touch with staff at the site if they feel they have a complaint. Details of how to do this have been widely advertised in the local press. We have also tried, by open days at the site, to explain to local people the reason for the noise and the very important role that Shoeburyness fulfils for the Ministry of Defence. We also try to deal sympathetically with claims from members of the public who feel that our activities may have caused damage to their property.

Since January 1995 the complaints regarding noise and vibration from residents in Kent have totalled 290 compared with 336 for the full year in 1994. There have been 26 days so far in 1995 on which one or more of the three Kent monitors have recorded noise above 130 decibels. It should be pointed out, however, that the monitors register all noise, not just that from Shoeburyness. Our statistics do not break down between noise and vibration. The vibrations are, in fact, the result of a low frequency noise side effect.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve (Chaplains)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many chaplains are currently appointed in the TAVR; to which regiments they are attached; which denominations they represent; and if he will make a statement. [2872]

Mr. Soames: There are at present 103 serving TA chaplains with three more in the process of being recruited.

The 103 serving TA chaplains are deployed as follows:

6 with Royal Armoured Corps Units.

8 with Royal Artillery Units.

6 with Royal Engineers Units.

9 with Royal Signals Units.

26 with Infantry Units.

6 with Royal Logistics Corps Units.

31 with Army Medical Services Units.

There are a further 11 chaplains serving with minor units.

The denominational split of the 103 chaplains currently serving with the TA is as follows:

	Number
Church of England	74
Roman Catholic	9
Methodist	2
Church of Scotland	13
United Board	5

Tornado Air Miss (Alaska)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report on the air miss between two Royal Air Force Tornado GR1s over Alaska in May 1993. [1308]

Mr. Soames: The investigation of air misses and publication of any subsequent reports are matters for the aviation authority in whose airspace the alleged incident occurred. My Department is not aware of an air miss between two Tornados over Alaska in May 1993.

Research and Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the indicative contributions to the EU budget in respect of research and development for his Department in 1993–94. [1909]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Table 2.1 of the statistical supplement to the forward look of Government-funded science, engineering and technology contains indicative figures for the United Kingdom's contributions to the EC budget in respect of research and development. My Department does not have policy responsibility for Community research and development expenditure.

Airwork Ltd.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will respond to the report of the Defence Select Committee into the work carried out on Tornado jets based at RAF St. Athans by Airwork Ltd. during 1993. [2399]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government intend to respond by the end of the year to the Defence Committee's report on market testing and contracting out of defence support functions.

Military Equipment Sales (Civilian Casualties)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to collate figures on civilian casualties caused by military equipment sold by United Kingdom firms. [2774]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In the case of equipment owned by the Ministry of Defence, accidents at work to MoD civilians are reportable to the Health and Safety Executive under the reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of Ministry of Defence personnel in the examination of timing devices allegedly connected with the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie. [1636]

Mr. Soames: Ministry of Defence scientists did assist the Dumfries and Galloway police. I am not prepared to give details that could prejudice criminal proceedings.

Isle of Wight (Visit)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to visit defence contractors on the Isle of Wight to discuss defence production. [838]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Currently I have no plans to do so.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current strength, by rank, of the Ministry of Defence police; what he expects it to be, by rank, in each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [2875]

Mr. Soames: The strength, by rank, of the Ministry of Defence police, as at 1 October 1995, was: chief constable, one; deputy chief constable, one; assistant chief constable, four; chief superintendent, seven; superintendent, 25; chief inspector, 58; inspector, 149; sergeant, 698; and constable 3,436.

The overall manpower requirements of the Ministry of Defence police are kept under constant review. We will issue consultative documents concerning our proposals for future defence police and guarding requirements shortly.

European Defence Co-operation

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the prospects for increased European defence co-operation; and if he will make a statement. [815]

Mr. Portillo: The Government are firmly committed to increasing European defence co-operation in a practical way that enhances defence capabilities and complements NATO. We hope our European partners share this objective.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of state aid (a) made available to and (b) promised to Chunghwa Picture Tubes Ltd. to locate in Lanarkshire. [338]

Mr. Kynoch: Details of the financial assistance offered to Chunghwa Picture Tubes Ltd. are commercially confidential.

The company is, however, eligible for support on exactly the same basis as any other commercial venture bringing investment and jobs to an assisted area. The greater part of the financial support package offered to the company comprised an offer of grant under the regional selective assistance scheme. In accordance with normal practice, brief details of the RSA offered to the company will be published in "Labour Market Trends" in the quarter after the first payment of grant is made. No payments have been made to date.

Gaelic Television Service

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received with regard to providing for an enhanced Gaelic television service within any forthcoming legislation for establishing digital terrestrial television services. [163]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has noted representations received last week from Comunn na Gaidhlig—the Gaelic development agency—and the Gaelic Television Committee which were both anxious to ensure that the needs and aspirations of the Gaelic-speaking community for enhanced Gaelic television and radio services are taken fully into account in the Government's plans for the introduction of digital terrestrial broadcasting services.

Water Authority Chairmen

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedure was used by the Scottish Office in appointing the chairman of Scotland's new water authorities; how many individuals were considered for the posts; what agencies were employed to assist this process; and what was the value of the contracts relating to the process of appointing these individuals. [1181]

Mr. Kynoch: Candidates for appointment were identified from the public appointments lists and other sources. About 100 names were considered. No external agency was involved.

Temazepam

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to restrict further the production of Temazepam; and if he will make a statement. [1580]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Additional controls to prevent diversion from the legitimate trade in Temazepam, including import and export licences, will shortly be introduced.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount of Temazepam per capita is distributed annually in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [1505]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1993–94, 99 grams of Temazepam were dispensed on prescription per 1,000 population in Scotland. In 1994–95 the figure was 89g.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to educate young people about the dangerous effects of Temazepam, with particular reference to its mixture with other drugs or injection in jellied form. [1577]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government encourage schools to tackle drugs education within a comprehensive programme of health and social education and good-quality resources have been made available to schools. The content of the curriculum in Scottish schools is, however, the responsibility of education authorities and teachers.

In addition, the Health Education Board for Scotland runs general drug misuse campaigns aimed at young people and their parents. A current campaign contains information on individual drugs, including Temazepam.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 17 October a ban on the prescribing of the gel-filled capsule formulation of Temazepam.

Inward Investment

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the value, at current prices, of inward investment to Scotland for the last five years. [1399]

Mr. Kynoch: The inward investment figures published by Locate in Scotland in each of the last five years are as follows:

Year	Number of projects	Planned investment (£ million)	Planned jobs (new and safeguarded)
1990–91	63	394.1	10,244
1991–92	59	380.9	6,002
1992–93	65	352.0	8,059
1993–94	95	587.6	11,072
1994–95	97	1,126.6	12,329
Totals	379	2,841.2	47,706

These figures relate only to projects handled by Locate in Scotland or the Scottish Office Education and Industry Department. The figures for planned investment and planned jobs are those provided by the companies concerned at the time of the investment decision and take no account of subsequent developments.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made towards cutting energy consumption in Government buildings for which he has responsibility in each year since 1990. [1438]

Mr. Kynoch: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my hon Friend the Minister for Construction Planning, and Energy Efficiency gave to the hon. Member for Surrey, East (Mr Ainsworth) on 17 May 1995, Official Report, columns 260–62.

Drugs (Education Expenditure)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure on education on drug abuse per regional council in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information sought is not held centrally by the Scottish Office. In Scottish schools, the life skills approach to drugs, alcohol and smoking will continue to be the core of education programmes rather than the focus on individual substances. It is, therefore, not possible to identify the money that has been spent on education on drug misuse.

NHS Trusts (Termination Payments)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to issue guidance to NHS trusts on the levels of severance payments to (a) NHS managers and (b) other NHS employees. [1783]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Guidance is in preparation on the calculation of termination payments to general and senior managers for issue to the NHS in Scotland. The guidance will also be appropriate to calculate termination payments to any other NHS staff on similar contracts to general and senior managers.

NHS Hospital Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many hospital doctors have left the national health service who qualified (a) five years previously and (b) 10 years previously in each year since 1991; [2279]

(2) if he will list the number of hospital (a) consultants and (b) doctors who have left the national health service through taking (i) early retirement or (ii) other voluntary reasons in each year since 1991. [2280]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally. Evidence of doctors leaving the profession prematurely is available from studies published in 1991 by Professor James Parkhouse. These studies suggested that although 20 per cent. of doctors were not practising in the national health service five years after qualification, the majority of these were not lost permanently to medicine. Many were working in short-term postings overseas, to develop further their skills, while others were working in United Kingdom medical work outside the NHS, or taking short career breaks.

Clinical Waste

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that individual general practitioners and other health service providers vet and properly dispose of their clinical waste. [2121]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The NHS management executive wrote to NHS health bodies on 31 August 1994 reminding them of their responsibilities for the management of clinical waste. General managers of health boards were asked to bring the letter to the attention of general practitioners, dentists and hospital/community pharmacists.

Artificial Limb and Appliance Centres

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how he will distribute the current central funding of artificial limb and appliance centre services to individual health boards as from 1 April 1996; [2134]

(2) if he will list the organisations he consulted about his decision to devolve the provision and funding of artificial limb and appliance centre services from the Common Services Agency to local health boards in Scotland with effect from 1 April 1996. [2131]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: ALAC services are not a designated national service and have been purchased centrally on a temporary basis for only two years. The national services division of the Common Services Agency which is responsible for centrally purchased services set up a working group in early 1995 to look at the future provision of these services. The working group was made up of representatives from trusts, health boards and artificial limb and appliance centres; from training, therapy, supplies and primary care interests; and a consumer sub-group and a consultation network. It concluded that funding for ALAC services should be devolved to health boards, a recommendation that I have approved.

The funding of artificial limb and appliance centres will be returned to boards in 1996–97 through the weighted capitation formula and notification of the notional allocation for each board will be included in the financial allocations for 1996–97.

Council Tax

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he plans to take to protect Scottish council tax payers. [3236]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During the past 10 years, current expenditure by Scottish local authorities has increased in real terms by 20 per cent., even after adjusting for additional responsibilities on authorities. In the same period, there has been an increase in Scottish local authority manpower levels. Since 1987, those levels have increased by almost 6 per cent. In the same period, staffing levels have reduced in England by over 6 per cent., despite the fact that English authorities have also had additional responsibilities such as care in the community transferred to them.

Since its introduction in 1993–94, the council tax in Scotland has risen faster than in England. The average band D tax has increased from £559 to £624 in the current year in Scotland and from £569 to £609 in England. In other words, there has been an increase of 11.6 per cent. in Scotland as compared with only 7.0 per cent. in England.

Against this background, I have decided that action must be taken to protect Scottish council tax payers. In addition to the significant increase in Government support for local authority spending next year which I am announcing separately, I plan to take the following two further measures.

The first concerns the use of CFCR by Scottish authorities. In the current year, authorities budgeted to spend a total of £132 million on CFCR, nearly three times the level in 1991–92. As CFCR is funded entirely from the council tax, increase in its use has pushed up tax levels. In the current year it has added £79 to the average band D council tax. Particularly in view of the predictions by some authorities of large tax increases next year, I have concluded that the use of CFCR needs to be curbed. For 1996–97 my intention is to use my powers under section 94 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 to limit consents for CFCR to a total of £62 million. As compared with the level of budgeted expenditure this year this will reduce the average band D council tax by £41. The detail of this, including how the £62 million will be distributed amongst authorities, will be the subject of discussion with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Despite my general desire to reduce controls on local government, I have concluded, especially against the background of the growth in expenditure, staffing levels and council tax levels in Scotland, that capping must be retained. I have therefore decided to announce provisional capping principles for the year ahead in order to assist local authorities in their budgeting process.

I have the power to cap a local authority either where I consider that its planned expenditure is excessive or where there is an excessive increase in its planned expenditure as compared with the previous year.
My provisional capping principles for 1996–97 are:

Mainland Councils

Any increase in budget for 1996–97 of more than 0.8 per cent. over the amount specified in relation to that council in a report under section 94A of the Local Government Finance Act 1992 will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is above the council's grant-aided expenditure for 1996–97—in the case of the Scottish Borders, Dumfries and Galloway, Fife and Highland councils—and the council's GAE for 1996–97 adjusted to take account of the transitional scheme to deal with the mismatch problem announced by the Minister with responsibility for industry and local government, my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch), on 22 November Official Report, column 162,—in the case of all other mainland councils;

Orkney Islands, Shetland Islands and Western Isles Councils

Any increase in budget between 1995–96 and 1996–97 of more than 0.8 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is above the council's GAE assessment for 1996–97;

Any budget for 1996–97 more than 12.5 per cent. above the council's GAE assessment will be excessive save that if that budget is no greater than the budget set by that council for 1995–96, the council will not be capped.

Local Government Finance

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce details of the 1996–97 Scottish local government finance settlement. [3237]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have decided to improve on last year's plans and to allocate to Scottish local authorities the full amount of the extra sum added to the Scottish block as a consequence of the English settlement. Scottish local authorities are therefore being treated very favourably, despite the difficult public expenditure round. Next year, the level of local authority spending in Scotland will be 31 per cent. higher per head in Scotland than in England and the level of Government support will be no less than 44 per cent. higher.

Within the settlement, priority is being given to the police and education services and a further transfer of resources is being made to local authorities in respect of their care in the community responsibilities.

On the basis of this settlement, there should be no need for cuts in front-line services or excessive council tax increases, especially if the new councils grasp the opportunity present by reorganisation to streamline their management structures and take a fresh approach to the way services are delivered to ensure that both the national and the local taxpayer receives best value for money.

The details of the settlement are:

Government-supported Expenditure

I propose that government supported expenditure—which is the Government's view of the total amount local authorities need to spend on providing services and meeting debt charges—for 1996–97 should be set at £6,200.7 million. After adjusting for transfers of responsibility to and from local government from 1 April 1996, this is an increase of 2.08 per cent. on the current year's figures.

Grant-aided Expenditure

Local authorities will incur an estimated £777.7 million on loan and leasing charges in 1996–97. This is an increase of £32.3 million over this year's figure—after adjusting for transfers of responsibility. These charges are increasing at an alarming rate and I am announcing separately my plans to bring them under greater control. After deducting this sum from the GSE total, £5,423 million is available for allocation as grant-aided expenditure. This is the amount which we think local authorities need to spend on services. This GAE amount is 1.75 per cent. higher than that for the current year, after adjusting for transfers of responsibility. I shall announce GAE figures for individual local authorities as soon as possible.

Aggregate External Finance

I further propose that Government support for local authority current expenditure—that is, aggregate external finance which consists of revenue support grant, specific grants and non-domestic rate income—for 1996–97 should be set at £5,400.9 million. This is an increase of 2.62 per cent. on the current year's figure, after adjusting for transfers of responsibility. Proposals for the distribution of AEF to individual local authorities are again likely to be issued before Christmas.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of local authority debt in Scotland and if he will make a statement. [3238]

Mr. Forsyth: At the end of March 1995 local authorities' outstanding debt on general fund services was £5,338 million. This represents an increase of £2,114 million or 65 per cent. since 31 March 1987. The level of loan charges and repayments associated with that debt is an estimated £799 million in the current year, £42 million higher than in 1994–95. At over 13 per cent. of all Government-supported expenditure, these loan charges are pre-empting an increasing proportion of the resources available for local authority services in Scotland. They are also pre-empting resources for other public services since rising loan debt is a factor I have had to take into account in deciding the share of the Scottish block which is allocated to revenue support for local authorities.

Outstanding capital debt on local authorities' housing revenue accounts has also increased since 1987, despite a 25 per cent. fall in the number of council houses over that period. Outstanding debt at 31 March 1995 was £3,938 million and debt per local authority house was £6,166, compared with £3,930 per house eight years earlier, a 57 per cent. increase. As the size of the local authority stock has declined, the burden of loan charges is being shouldered by a decreasing number of tenants.

The high debt levels in Scotland are the product of two factors: the high levels of capital spending by Scottish local authorities, 75 per cent. higher per head than in England; and the absence of a policy which encourages the use of receipts to repay outstanding debt.

Provided they spend them in the same year, local authorities in Scotland are currently allowed to use the full proceeds of asset sales to incur new investment, without having to pay off debt. This contrasts with the position in England and Wales where councils are in general required to use 50 per cent. of general receipts and 75 per cent. of most housing receipts to repay outstanding debt.

I have decided that it is necessary, in the interests of future generations of council tax payers, council tenants and customers for local services, to encourage greater prudence in the use of capital receipts. From 1 April 1996, therefore, the new Scottish authorities will be obliged to use 25 per cent. of their capital receipts for the repayment of debt. My present intention is that from 1 April 1997, the proportion of receipts to be used to repay debt will be 50 per cent. The details of the new regime, including the question of any exceptions to these general rules and the implications for large-scale disposals of housing stock, will be the subject of detailed consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in the near future. As announced separately, I have also decided to control the level on capital expenditure financed from general revenues, in order to protect council tax payers.

By allowing councils to spend 75 per cent. of their receipts next year, I am giving them an incentive to dispose of assets quickly after local government reorganisation. If councils take full advantage of this opportunity and make sufficient progress in reducing their outstanding debt, I hope to be able to allow them in future to spend 50 per cent. of both housing and non-housing receipts, a more favourable position than in England. I shall, however, keep the position under review.

Councils' ability to incur capital expenditure at their own hand will obviously be curtailed. There is, however, plenty of opportunity for them to meet the needs of their communities by doing more to involve the private sector in meeting local needs. The outgoing councils have in general been able to pursue the outdated philosophy that where needs exist they must be met by direct public investment. The Government's approach, reflected in the private finance initiative, is that the public sector should increasingly focus on specifying the services its customers need and look to others to incur the necessary investment. By actively promoting the private finance initiative and pursuing joint ventures with the private sector, the new councils should be able to attract private investment on a scale which more than offsets the effect of these changes.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the non-domestic rate poundage for 1996–97. [3239]

Mr. Forsyth: Yes. I propose that the Scottish non-domestic rate poundage for 1996–97 should be 44.9p. An order prescribing the poundage will be laid before Parliament in due course. This poundage maintains the link between the Scottish and English poundages and ensures that Scottish business will continue to benefit from the Government's unified business rate policy.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the outturn figures for regional selective assistance (a) offers and (b) payments made in 1994–95; and if he will indicate how these figures relate to the original budgeted plans. [2109]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 24 November 1995]: Offers of RSA, worth £116.7 million, were made in 1994–95. As regards payments of regional selective assistance I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 November, Official Report, column 57.

Health Boards (Expenditure)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will itemise how much (a) NHS trusts, (b) general practitioner fundholders, (c) regional health authorities and (d) district health authorities spent on health care from non-NHS providers in each year since 1991–92 in each region. [2415]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 November 1995]: In Scotland, the purchase of hospital, community and family health care is primarily the responsibility of health boards. The tables are based on health board accounts and show expenditure on purchases of health care from private providers, by health board, and by general practitioner fundholders. Expenditure by NHS trusts on purchases from private providers in Scotland is not held centrally.

Health boards also have contracts with local authorities, hospices and voluntary agencies where these organisations are registered charities undertaking specific contracted activities, but information on these is not collected centrally.

Legislative Repeals

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what legislation from his Department passed in the last five years contains provision for statutory repeal or review. [2038]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The Department regularly reviews and, where appropriate, amends or consolidates relevant legislation. For example, in the 1994–95 parliamentary session there was a major consolidation of criminal justice legislation.

In addition, the Scottish Law Commission, together with the Law Commission for England and Wales, has responsibility for statute law revision. The Law Commissions prepare programmes of statute law revision with a view to recommending in reports presented to Parliament the repeal of enactments identified as being no longer of practical utility, usually because they are spent, obsolete or unnecessary.

In the last five years the Law Commissions have submitted two statute law revision reports. The 14th report on statute law revision was published on 22 April 1993 and was implemented by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1993, c. 50. The 15th report was published on 22 March 1995 and was implemented by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1995, c. 44.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of his Department's expenditure in 1994–95 was spent on procuring goods or services from small and medium enterprises. [1954]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The Scottish Office's current financial and procurement systems have no facility for categorising suppliers according to the size of their businesses. It is therefore not possible to make any estimate for 1994–95 of the proportion of expenditure with suppliers which could be considered to be small or medium enterprises.

Forestry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what work the Forestry Commission has undertaken to classify its woodland according to level of recreational use; if he will publish the results of such work; if he will detail how recreational use has been assessed; if he will describe the purpose of the exercise; and if he will make a statement. [2424]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 27 November 1995]: Following the forestry review, we asked the forestry Commission to strengthen the arrangements for protecting public access to woodlands which it sold. This included classifying the woodlands according to the level of existing public access. The new arrangements will be set out in revised access guidelines which will be published soon.

Campsie View Flats, Cumbernauld

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given Cumbernauld development corporation concerning Campsie View flats in Cumbernauld; and if he will make a statement. [2540]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 27 November 1995]: My right hon. Friend has approved the recommendation from Cumbernauld development corporation that, when compared to the costs of the refurbishment necessary to bring the homes up to standard, demolition of the three blocks of flats at Campsie View represents better value for money. Over the next few months, tenants will be rehoused and the corporation will repurchase the owner-occupied properties in the blocks.

Roads Programme

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an announcement on the roads programme for 1996. [2544]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1995]: My right hon. Friend will make an announcement on the roads programme for the next three years after he has set out his new expenditure plans for the Scottish Office.

Lanarkshire Development Agency

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to the Lanarkshire development agency on the membership of its board following local government reorganisation; and if he will make a statement. [2541]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 27 November 1995]: None. The membership of the board of a local enterprise company is a matter for that board subject to the requirements in its articles of association. In particular, these require two thirds of the members to be drawn from senior businessmen or businesswomen from the local area. It is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise to ensure that Lanarkshire development agency complies with those requirements.

Councillor's Earnings

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he makes for councillors to disclose earnings wholly or partly derived from their elected membership of a local authority; and if he will make a statement. [2543]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 27 November 1995]: Regulation 28 of the Local Authorities etc. (Allowances) (Scotland) Regulations 1995 requires councils to publish annually details of payments—basic allowances, attendance allowances and special responsibility allowances—made to individual councillors.

Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met councillor Rosemary McVenna CBE JP, president of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities; and what subjects were discussed. [2545]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 27 November 1995]: I last met Councillor Rosemary McKenna and other representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 10 November as part of the normal consultation on local government finance matters. During this meeting, a number of matters affecting local government in Scotland were discussed including the 1996–97 local government finance settlement and reorganisation finance issues.

WALES

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action he is taking to initiate further research into the incidence of breast cancer in Wales; [1147]

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that all patients with breast cancer have equal access to high quality care. [1148]

Mr. Richards: In April, my right hon. Friend announced plans for improving cancer care services in Wales based on the report of the chief medical officers of England and Wales—"A Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services".

The report recognised that it is essential for all patients with cancer, including those with breast cancer, to have access to high quality, safe and effective care.

An expert group on cancer services, chaired by Professor Ian Cameron, provost of the university of Wales college of medicine, was established earlier this year to assist health authorities in Wales to implement the recommendations of the chief medical officers' report. It has already started work on identifying how effective services for all cancer patients should be provided and will report in 1996.

International comparisons suggest that differences in the rates observed between countries and regions are due to a mixture of social, environmental and genetic factors. For this reason, the Department considers that basic research into how and why breast cancer develops is more likely to be of benefit in terms of treatment and prevention than an attempt to establish why exactly breast cancer rates vary from region to region.

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish comparative statistics for Wales, England, Scotland and Northern Ireland on the incidence and mortality rates from breast cancer. [1144]

Mr. Richards: Information on deaths from cancer is published separately in the annual reports by the registrars general for Scotland and Northern Ireland, and by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for England and Wales.

Information on cancer registrations for Scotland is given in "Cancer Registrations: Scotland", published by the Scottish Common Health Service Authority; for Northern Ireland in "Cancer Registration", published by the Department of Health and Social Security; in "Cancer Registrations: Wales", published by the Wales cancer registry; and in the series "Cancer Statistics: Registrations" by the OPCS.

Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Temazepam

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths in each of the past five years are attributable to the abuse of Temazepam in each district health authority in Wales. [1508]

Mr. Richards: The table shows the number of deaths recorded in "The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys" due to temazepam abuse, alone or with other drugs—ICDs[1] 304.1, 304.7, 304.8, 305.4, 305.9—by year of occurrence and district health authority for the latest five year period available.

Cancer Research

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial contribution the Government are making directly to cancer research; and how much is contributed by charities in respect of Wales. [1146]

Mr. Richards: The Government are committed to encouraging research into the causes, prevention, early detection and treatment of all cancers.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which received Government funding from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The council spent £13.5 million directly on research into cancer in 1992–93. This figure would rise considerably if a proportion of the council's spend on basic medical research that could yield results relevant to cancer were included.

Charities, including the Imperial Cancer Research Fund and the Cancer Research Campaign, play a major role in cancer research. In 1992–93 they spent £114.8 million. Information is not held centrally on the contributions made by charities in respect of Wales.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the indicative contributions to the EU budget in respect of research and development for his Department in 1993–94. [1918]

Mr. Hague: Table 2.1 of the "Statistical Supplement to the Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology" contains indicative figures for the United Kingdom's contributions to the EC budget in respect of research and development. My Department does not have any policy responsibilities for Community research and development expenditure.

RECHAR II

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the membership of the technical group advising him on the distribution of RECHAR II money in south Wales. [2116]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office officials are currently consulting the industrial south Wales monitoring committee on the membership of the RECHAR II technical group.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount available to south Wales under the RECHAR II programme; and what consultations he has held on the distribution of these funds. [2115]

Mr. Jones: Some 20.21 mecu—£16.8 million at current exchange rates—will be available to the mining communities of south wales under the RECHAR II programme over the period 1994–97. Welsh Office officials are currently consulting the industrial south wales monitoring committee on how these moneys are to be administered.

General Practitioners (Out-of-hours Systems)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each family health service authority and for Wales as a whole (a) the number of general practitioner practices and (b) the number of practices known to operate an out-of-hours system similar to that operated by the association of Gwent doctors on call. [2314]

Mr. Richards: The number of general practitioner partnerships and single-handed practitioners for each family health services authority in Wales as at 1 April 1995 was as follows:

	Number
Clwyd	73
Dyfed	65
Gwent	91
Gwynedd	52
Mid Glamorgan	104
Powys	18
South Glamorgan	72
West Glamorgan	63
Wales	538

The organisation of out-of-hours services is a matter for individual FHSAs, and information is not held centrally.

Executive Agencies (Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by staff of the agency (a) the cost, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff involved. [2362]

Mr. Hague: For Cadw, the Welsh Historic Monuments executive agency, responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executive, Mr. T. J. Cassidy. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

I also have shared responsibility for the Planning Inspectorate and the Agricultural Development Advisory Service agencies. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are arranging for replies to be given separately for these agencies.

Letter from T. J. Cassidy to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 November 1995:

As Cadw is an Executive Agency the Secretary of State for Wales has asked me to write to you direct in respect of Cadw, in response to your recent Parliamentary Question about overseas travel by Cadw staff.

Three overseas visits were made by staff in the last financial year and the information that you have requested is as follows:

Cost	Country visited	Post held
1,249	USA	Head of Presentation
1,139	Spain	Chief Executive
148	Eire	Head of Presentation

Staff Transfer (Unitary Authorities)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which Welsh county and district councils have submitted detailed plans for transfer of staff to unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement. [2477]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All county and district councils whose areas are split by reorganisation have submitted details of staff to be transferred to the new authorities, although there are gaps in some cases because of decisions which have yet to be taken by those authorities. The old councils concerned have been asked to supply the further information as quickly as possible.

Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many playing fields are currently under threat of development; [2587]

(2) what area of playing fields have been sold off since 1981; [2585]

(3) what is the value of playing fields sold off since 1981; [2588]

(4) how many playing fields have been sold off since 1981. [2584]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Research

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much he spends annually on research in Wales, indicating the amounts spent under each heading; and if he will make a statement. [2660]

Mr. Hague: Estimated expenditure by the Welsh office on research in 1994–95 is as follows:

Subject area	Estimated outturn £ million
Health	1.9
Housing	0.1
Environmental protection	0.6
Transport and Highways	0.1
Public services	0.1
Total expenditure	2.7

The Welsh Office also supports, through the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales, basic and strategic research in universities and colleges.

Further information is contained in "Forward Look of Government Funded Science Engineering and Technology 1995", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the sheep annual premium was paid to farmers in Wales in each year since 1990. [2807]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Payments began in the following months:

Scheme	First advance payment	Second advance payment	Final payment
1990	September 1990	December 1990	May 1991
1991	September 1991	November 1991	April 1992
1992	September 1992	November 1992	April 1993
1993	October 1993	October 1993	May 1994
1994	September 1994	September 1994	June 1995
1995	July 1995	July 1995	Not yet determined

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the hill livestock compensatory allowance was paid to farmers in Wales in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994 and (d) 1995. [2806]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Payments began in February in each case.

Professors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) female and (b) male professors there are in Wales, and if he will make a statement. [2661]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Out-of-town Supermarkets

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many out-of-town supermarkets have been opened in the last three years. [2657]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not collected centrally.

Roads Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the planned expenditure for roads in Wales in the year 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [2923]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend is to announce his roads and transport expenditure plans for 1996–97 shortly.

Listed Building Surveys

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with Cadw what measures are required to encourage tendering by Welsh-based consultants for the surveying of historic properties; and if he will make a statement. [1087]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department, of which Cadw forms a part, follows procurement procedures which promote open competition between suppliers to offer value for taxpayers' money and comply with European public procurement regulations. The procurement procedures cannot be used to discriminate in favour of Welsh companies. Of the six companies currently working on contract to Cadw, three are based in Wales. Expressions of interest were invited through the United Kingdom and Welsh press bilingually, and through the Architects' Journal. Cadw would welcome any further expressions of interest from suitably qualified Welsh-based organisations to undertake this work.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in respect of (a) each district council area in Wales and (b) for Wales as a whole the number of historic buildings surveyed by Cadw for each of the last available three years, together with his estimate of the number of properties which remain to be surveyed. [1088]

Mr. Jones: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. T. J. Cassidy, to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from T. J. Cassidy to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 28 November 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question in which you asked for information about the number of historic buildings surveyed by Cadw in the last 3 years and the work that remains to be done.

The Government gave a commitment to accelerate the Welsh listed building resurvey programme in response to the recommendation made by the Welsh Affairs Committee which reported on the preservation of historic buildings and ancient monuments some three years ago. Since that time substantial progress has been made—the Agency has resurveyed some 78 Community Council areas. This has seen the number of listed buildings in Wales increase from 14,778 in 1992 to some 17,671 today. The completion of the resurvey by 2005 should, we estimate, see the number of listed buildings increase to roughly double today's total. We have assumed that the volume of structures to be surveyed is between 2 and 3 million, and to judge by experience in England and Scotland, would expect to list about 1½%.

In undertaking a community resurvey all buildings within each community are surveyed and those which are judged to be of special architectural or historic interest are listed. The Agency does not keep statistics of the numbers of buildings assessed in each community but I hope that the number of listed buildings will give you some indication of progress to date. To complete the resurvey within the next 10 years will require the Agency to resurvey over 700 further communities—and to do so remains a priority for the Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many statutory instruments his Department sponsored in the last Session of Parliament; and how many of these (a) constituted a new rule or regulation, (b) were introduced to implement European Community directives and (c) amplify the minimum standards set out in an original European Community directive. [2461]

Mr. Hague: The Secretary of State for Wales makes many statutory instruments with English Ministers and the Secretary of State for Scotland. Other Departments will include such statutory instruments in their lists. In the 1994–95 Session of Parliament, 101 local statutory instruments were made solely by the Secretary of State for Wales. These relate to the control of traffic either temporarily or permanently on various lengths of trunk roads and motorways in Wales; 111 general SIs were made by the Secretary of State alone. Six of these constituted new rules or regulations prohibiting or restricting activities.Five general statutory instruments were made to implement European Community directives. None amplified the minimum standards set out in an original European Community directive.

A449

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the access road to the A449 from Raglan to Newport will be reopened. [2547]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The southbound slip road at the Raglan interchange will be opened by the end of the year.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost to date of the reconstruction of the A449 trunk road; what is the estimated total cost; and on what date the road will become fully operational. [2546]

Mr. Jones: The cost to date of the renewal of the A449 trunk road is £8.6 million. The estimated total cost is expected to be £21.4 million. The future programme has yet to be determined.

Tir Cymen and Environmentally Sensitive Area Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the success of the current prescriptions of the Tir Cymen and ESA schemes; [2937]

(2) if he will make it his policy to modify the prescriptions of Tir Cymen/ESAs to enhance the development of farmland bird communities; [2936]

(3) what forecasts he has made about the impact of the Tir Cymen and ESA schemes on farmland bird communities in Wales. [2938]

Mr. Hague: Tir Cymen and ESA prescriptions are subject to a five-year evaluation monitoring exercise and five year policy review respectively. Some modifications and enhancements have been, and will continue to be made, during Tir Cymen's experimental period; and modifications of ESA prescriptions will be considered in the light of the policy review. Although neither scheme is specifically targeted at enhancing the population of farmland birds, the nature of both will help to ensure a positive impact on their populations in Wales.

RSPB "Silent Fields" Report

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds report "Silent Fields"; and what proposals he will initiate in response to this report. [2939]

Mr. Hague: I launched the report in Wales at the royal Welsh show in July. I also discussed it with the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds when I met it on 24 October. I will take the report into account in developing environmental and agricultural policies.

Overgrazing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on overgrazing; if he will place a copy of all representations in the Library; and what is his assessment of the impact of overgrazing on Wales' wildlife. [2931]

Mr. Hague: I have received a number of complaints about specific instances of overgrazing, which we are investigating, as well as representations about the issue generally. I will place copies of the general representations in the Library, subject to the permission of the organisations concerned. Overgrazing can have a damaging effect on habitat, which we are anxious to arrest.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of reports of overgrazing that have been investigated by the Welsh Office agriculture department in relation to the hill livestock compensatory allowance over the past five years; and how many of these investigations have resulted in hill livestock compensatory allowance payments being refused. [2933]

Mr. Hague: We have investigated nine cases in the period, all of which have been drawn to our attention during the past 18 months. The investigations are still in progress because of the need to study the vegetation during all seasons of the year. Where overgrazing is proven, our aim is to encourage farmers to change management practices voluntarily or reduce stocking levels to prevent further damage. There have been no cases where HLCA's have been reduced, but WOAD retains the right to do so in any cases where changes in farming practices are shown to be necessary and cannot be achieved voluntarily.

Moorland Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for increasing the financial incentives of the moorland scheme. [2932]

Mr. Hague: The moorland scheme payment rates are currently under review. No decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been made for entry into the moorland scheme in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [2935]

Mr. Hague: Five applications have been approved in respect of the moorland scheme in Wales. In addition, 28 farmers have expressed an interest in joining the scheme, which suggests the potential for further take-up in future years.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring of birds is taking place or is planned in environmentally sensitive areas in Wales; what methodologies are being used; which organisations have been consulted about monitoring; and if he will place copies of all consultation documents in the Library. [2934]

Mr. Hague: Winter wading bird populations are being monitored in the Lleyn peninsula and Ynys Mon ESAs using the wetland bird survey and national wildfowl counts, which have been developed by the British Trust for Ornithology and the Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust respectively and are contained in the ADAS national strategy for ESA monitoring. A survey of breeding waders in these ESAs is also planned. The Countryside Council for Wales, as my statutory conservation advisers, has been consulted. No consultation documents are available to be placed in the Library of the House.

Non-Domestic Rating

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his proposals are for the Welsh non-domestic rate poundage for the next financial year. [3326]

Mr. Hague: I propose that the national non-domestic rate poundage for Wales should rise to 40.5p to reflect the annual increase in the retail prices index to September 1995.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his proposals are for local government revenue spending in 1996–97. [3327]

Mr. Hague: I propose to set total standard spending in Wales for 1996–97 at £2,867.3 million. This figure includes £149.6 million for care in the community. It represents an increase of £85.2 million, 3.1 per cent. on the comparable level of funding for 1995–96.

I propose to set central government support for total standard spending at £2,517.4 million.

I shall announce provisional standard spending assessments and provisional capping principles for Welsh police authorities later this week. At the same time, I shall announce my proposals for aggregate external finance and for damping increases in council tax arising from the reorganisation of local government from 1 April 1996. My Department will shortly write to the Welsh local authority associations to consult them on my proposals for revenue support grant in 1996–97.

I shall announce provisional standard spending assessments and provisional capping principles for unitary authorities in mid-December and my final decisions early in the new year.

Housing Revenue Account Subsidy

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to consult on his housing revenue account subsidy proposals for 1996–97 and what proposals he will be making. [3328]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office is issuing proposals for consultation today. Local authorities and other consultees have been invited to let us have their views by 22 December 1995. I am arranging for copies of the proposals to be placed in the Library of the House.

We are proposing to keep guideline rents for 1996–97 at the same level in real terms as for 1995–96. This means an increase of £48 per dwelling per year, 92p per week for each authority. The flat rate increase is a transitional measure for the first year of the unitary authorities. We shall consult next year on the distribution of guideline rent increases between authorities in future years.

To encourage efficiency, we are also proposing a change in the subsidy rules which will limit rent rebate subsidy to the guideline rent increase. Authorities with rent below the guideline will be unaffected. The proposal does not affect tenants' entitlement to rent rebate.

For Wales total management and maintenance allowances will be around £175 million. This will allow broadly the same cash value of allowances per dwelling as in 1995–96. However, there will be increases for authorities furthest below the target level under a formula which takes account of relative stock condition. No authority will receive less than the equivalent of their 1995–96 allowance per dwelling and all authorities will achieve at least 97 per cent. of their targeted level in 1996–97.

Together, these proposals strike a reasonable balance between the need to constrain public expenditure and the need to ensure that housing is provided for tenants at reasonable cost.

Housing Associations (Tax Relief Grant)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on tax relief grant for non-charitable housing associations. [3329]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) by the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration.

HEALTH

Research and Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were indicative contributions to the EU budget in respect of research and development for his Department in 1993–94. [1911]

Mr. Malone: Table 2.1 of the statistical supplement to the "Forward Look of Government funded Science, Engineering and Technology", copies of which are available in the Library, contains indicative figures for the United Kingdom's contributions to the European Community budget in respect of research and development. Departments' policy responsibilities are subject to change and can vary from year to year. The Department of Health currently has responsibility for 2.67 per cent. of the United Kingdom's share of the Community R and D budget.

Carbon Monoxide Poisoning

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will be responsible for alerting doctors and the medical services to test for carbon monoxide poisoning, after the introduction of competition in the domestic gas supply market. [2005]

Mr. Sackville: The chief medical officer will shortly be issuing a reminder that general practitioners should consider the possibility of carbon monoxide poisoning when patients complain of certain symptoms. The medical profession will continue to be responsible for considering all possibilities when diagnosing illness in their patients.

Accident and Emergency League Tables

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the next edition of the accident and emergency league tables the number of patients left on trolleys for more than two hours in each NHS trust. [1798]

Mr. Malone: The current patients charter standard is that patients admitted to hospital through accident and emergency departments should be given a bed as soon as possible and certainly within three to four hours. This standard will be tightened to two hours from 1 April 1996.

The next set of NHS performance tables will cover NHS performance to 31 March 1996.

"Employer's Guide to Stress"

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the document commissioned by his Department entitled "Employers' Guide to Stress"; how many copies were printed; and what has happened to them. [2078]

Mr. Bowis: The Department commissioned a document for internal use. The cost to the Department of this was £1,500. Subsequently, the Department has agreed that a priced version of this may be published independently of the Department by HMSO. It will be published in due course.

Asthma

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the number of preventable deaths from asthma. [2227]

Mr. Sackville: We do not have the information centrally on which to base such an assessment. It is important that people with asthma should discuss with their general practitioner or an asthma nurse what their individual trigger factors are and how to avoid them, and what practical steps and medicines they may take to control their symptoms.

NHS Hospital Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of hospital (a) consultants and (b) doctors who have left the national health service (i) through taking early retirement or (ii) for other voluntary reasons in each year since 1991. [2281]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to require general practitioner fundholders to inform their patients of the hospital with whom they have contracted for in-patient services. [2238]

Mr. Malone: General practitioner fundholders are already expected to make available to patients at the practice, key information which relates to the management of their fund, including major shifts in purchasing intentions and annual practice plans. The requirement is set out in the "Accountability Framework for GP Fundholding", published in April 1995, copies of which are available in the Library.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been diagnosed as suffering from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in the last 24 months; how many people so diagnosed had previously received growth hormone treatment; and if he will make a statement. [2312]

Mr. Sackville: Between 24 November 1993 and 24 November 1995, there have been 89 definite and probable cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease. Of these, six had previously received growth hormone treatment.

Executive Agencies (Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by staff of the agency (a) the cost, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff involved. [2364]

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lowestoft Hospital

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement regarding Suffolk health authority's proposal to close 30 continuing care beds at Lowestoft hospital; [2094]

(2) what representations he has received from (a) members of the local community and (b) medical professionals regarding Suffolk health authority's proposal to close 30 continuing care beds at Lowestoft hospital; [2095]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of Suffolk health authority's proposal to close 30 continuing care beds at Lowestoft hospital on local continuing care facilities; what alternative provision for continuing care in the area has been proposed; and if he can make a statement. [2096]

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for Suffolk health authority, which is currently conducting public consultations on the proposal.

Men's Health

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new steps he is taking to improve standards of health among men. [2129]

Mr. Sackville: Departmental activity to improve men's health continues through the strategy of "The Health of the Nation", which places an important focus on men's health in emphasising the reduction of avoidable illness and premature death.

Men's health was discussed in the report of the sub-group of the chief medical officer's health of the nation working group—"Variations in Health: What Can the Department of Health and the NHS Do?"

The Department is also contributing to raising awareness of testicular cancer and carrying out research into prostate cancer.

Queens Medical Centre, Nottingham

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion administration costs form in the overall budget of the QMC, Nottingham; and what is the equivalent figure for other hospitals in the United Kingdom. [2106]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not centrally available.

Manchester Family Health Services Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Sectretary of State for Health what reason the chief executive of Manchester FHSA gave for resigning from it; and what was his age at the time of his resignation. [2236]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for Manchester family health services authority.

NHS Trusts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS trust executive directors received annual salaries of more than (a) £90,000 and (b) 100,000 in each financial year since 1992–93; [3117]

(2) how many NHS trust executive directors received annual salaries of more than £100,000 in the years 1992–93 to 1994–95. [3105]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Audit Commission Powers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers the Audit Commission has to carry out investigations into the reasons for and costs of the early retirements of chief executives at NHS authorities and trusts. [3115]

Mr. Sackville: The Audit Commission and its appointed auditors have powers to examine all areas of expenditure incurred by health authorities and trusts.

Hospital Beds

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of hospital beds in each year since 1988–89; [3118]

(2) what was the number of total available NHS acute hopsital beds in each year between 1988–89 and 1994–95. [3104]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is published annually in "Bed availability for England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Medical Examinations

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the annual number of unconsenting medical examinations on female patients; and if he will make a statement. [450]

Mr. Sackville: All patients with the capacity to do so have a common law right to consent or otherwise before undergoing a medical examination or treatment. Exceptions are where examination or treatment is required for a life-saving procedure and the patient is unable to indicate her wishes; where there are statutory powers requiring examination of a patient; or where the patient is detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 and treatment is for mental disorder. If an adult does not have the capacity to consent, medical examination and treatment can still be given if they are in her best interests but must be confined to what is necessary to preserve life, health or well-being. A court can also make orders in respect of the treatment of adults incapable of consenting.

Information about medical examinations falling into these categories is not available.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many statutory instruments his Department sponsored in the last Session of Parliament; and how many of these (a) constituted a new rule or regulation, (b) were introduced to implement European Community directives and (c) amplifies the minimum standards set out in an original European Community directive. [2427]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health sponsored 222 statutory instruments in the last Session of Parliament. Of this total, 62 constitute a new rule or regulation and six were introduced to implement European Community directives. None amplifies the minimum standards set out in any of the original European Community directives.

Migration Statistics

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the net migration figures for each of the last 10 years for which they are available; and if he will make a statement. [2337]

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Estimated net inward migration to the United Kingdom

Year	Thousands of migrants
1984	58.3
1985	80.2
1986	58.8
1987	30.6
1988	18.3
1989	91.2
1990	88.8
1991	73.9
1992	35.5
1993	35.2

Work Experience

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to hospitals about school pupils undertaking work experience in hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [2762]

Mr. Malone: None. This is a matter for local national health service employers.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hip replacement operations have been carried out in the national health service on individuals over the age of 80 years during the past 12 months. [2698]

Mr. Sackville: In 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available, 18,487 patients over the age of 80 years had hip replacement or other arthroplasty of the hip operations.

Public Bodies (Income and Staff)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the annual income from (a) fees, (b) charges and (c) fines; what was the total number of staff employed (i) part time and (ii) full time; and what contribution his Department has made towards the annual running costs in each of the past three years in respect of (1) the Medicines Control Agency, (2) the Good Laboratory Practice Monitoring Authority, (3) the Medical Devices Agency and (4) the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. [2749]

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

	Annual income			Total number of staff employed		Department's contribution to annual running costs

Social Workers

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers there were per (a) 10,000 residents and (b) 10,000 residents over 65 years of age in each year since 1988 in each metropolitan district, London borough and shire county. [2790]

Mr. Bowis: It would depend on the definition of "social workers"—that is, by qualifications or by job and whether one were looking at all of such categories working in all sectors.

The Department has published a wide range of statistical information on local authority staff which is available in the Library.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers qualified in mental health in each year since 1988 in each metropolitan district, London borough and shire county. [2789]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Unregistrable Children's Homes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the numbers of (a) unregistrable children's homes visited by the social services inspectorate, (b) proprietors interviewed, (c) agencies sent a questionnaire and (d) questionnaires completed, in their recent study of unregistrable children's homes. [2791]

Mr. Bowis: Five, six, 41 and 15 respectively.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make publicly available a copy of the questionnaire sent to agencies and proprietors managing small unregistrable children's homes as part of the study by the social services inspectorate published in August. [2792]

Mr. Bowis: Copies of the questionnaire have been placed in the Library.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much private capital has been invested in each NHS region and in how many projects in each year since the private finance initiative was launched, listing each of the projects and their value. [3088]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 6 November, Official Report, columns 622–23.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, for the purposes of the private finance initiative in the NHS, if he will specify which clinical services are to be excluded from PFI-NHS contracts. [3103]

Mr. Sackville: The private finance initiative in the national health service is concerned with the provision of modern and efficient facilities for the delivery of NHS health care. It does not seek to extend private sector responsibility into the clinical area. No clinical or clinical support service will be provided by PFI partners without the support of local clinicians.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many schemes, and to what value, are currently being considered for private finance initiative in each region. [3091]

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify the PFI contracts in the NHS (a) under way, (b) signed and (c) under discussion. [3102]

Mr. Sackville: To ensure that national health service capital projects meet NHS needs as cost effectively as possible, the option of using private finance, under this Government's private finance initiative, must be considered for every potential capital project. Formulation of plans for projects to meet local needs is the responsibility of NHS trusts and health authorities. I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 6 November, Official Report, columns 622–23, for the available information on PFI projects that have been given approval by the NHS executive.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many officials are responsible within (a) his Department and (b) the NHS executive for the private finance initiative. [3092]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 2 May 1995, Official Report, columns 175–76.

Psychiatry (Consultants)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) acute adult psychiatric, (b) adult rehabilitation and continuing care, (c) child and adolescent psychiatric, (d) learning disabilities, (e) old age psychiatric and (f) psychotherapy consultant posts have been vacant in each of the last five years in each region. [2943]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) acute adult psychiatric, (b) adult rehabilitation and continuing care, (c) child and adolescent psychiatric, (d) learning disabilities, (e) old age psychiatric and (f) psychotherapy consultants there are in each region and per 100,000 head of population. [2945]

Mr. Bowis: The available information is shown in the tables.

Mr. Bowis: Information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medium secure psychiatric beds have been available in each region in each of the last three years per 100,000 population. [2930]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 9 June, Official Report, columns 333–34.

Private Patient Income

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total income received from private patients by (a) region and (b) each trust in each region in 1994–95. [2952]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 November, Official Report, column 337.

Prescriptions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the speed which pharmacists are paid in full for prescriptions dispensed; and if he will make a statement. [3018]

Mr. Malone: None. Pharmacists are currently paid on time, to a timetable originally agreed with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee.

Services and Treatment (Non-NHS Purchases)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department maintain on the services and treatments purchased by (a) NHS trusts, (b) health authorities or (c) general practitioner fundholders from outside the NHS. [3090]

Mr. Sackville: Information on services and treatments purchased outside the national health service is included in the information requirements set out in the health authorities manual of accounts on form HFR25, family health services authorities manual of accounts on form FAA23 and in NHS trusts manual of accounts on form TFR3. Copies of these manuals will be placed in the Library.

NHS Policy Board

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the NHS policy board and explain their remit. [3094]

Mr. Malone: The national health service policy board provides a forum in which Ministers and senior managers meet regional chairmen to consider current NHS management issues. The board is non-statutory and is advisory to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. The members of the policy board are:

The right hon. Stephen Dorrell, Secretary of State for Health; Gerald Malone, Minister of State for Health; the hon. Tom Sackville, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State; John Bowis OBE, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State; Baroness Cumberlege CBE, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Graham Hart, Permanent Secretary Department of Health; Alan Langlands, NHS Chief Executive; Dr. Kenneth Calman, Chief Medical Officer; Yvonne Moores, Chief Nursing Officer; Keith Ackroyd, Regional Chairman Trent; Bryan Baker, Regional Chairman West Midlands; Sir Stuart Burgess, Regional Chairman Anglia and Oxford; Rennie Fritchie, Regional Chairman South and West; John Greetham, Regional Chairman Northern and Yorkshire; Sir William Staveley, Regional Chairman North Thames; William Wells, Regional Chairman South Thames; Sir Donald Wilson, Regional Chairman North West.

External Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on all external consultants, with special reference to management consultants in each year since 1990–91, for his Department, the national health service executive and other agencies. [2950]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health and its agencies have spent the following amount on all external consultancy.

1992–93: £18,399,000

1993–94: £15,933,037

1994–95: £18,479,405.

Information about expenditure on management consultancy specifically is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the quantified annual cost savings made as a consequence of spending on external consultants by his Department, the national health service executive and other agencies in each year since 1990–91. [2960]

Mr. Sackville: External consultants are used to assist in improving efficiency and effectiveness in the Department, but it is not possible to assess the savings which are a direct consequence of their activity.

NHS Services

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) clinical services and (b) non-clinical services provided by the NHS. [3101]

Mr. Sackville: The national health service provides a comprehensive range of clinical and non-clinical services for the investigation, diagnosis, treatment and care of people both inside and outside hospital.

Medicines

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods alternative to the resale price maintenance scheme for medicines he has considered for ensuring the continued effectiveness of a nationwide pharmacy service. [3016]

Mr. Malone: None. The Office of Fair Trading is conducting a review of the resale price maintenance arrangement for medicines.

NHS Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) medical locums and (b) agency nursing staff were employed in the NHS (i) as a total and (ii) as a proportion of permanent medical and nursing staff in each year since 1990 (1) nationally and (2) regionally. [2421]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 24 November 1995]: This information will be placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Widows Pension

Mr. Simon Hughes: to ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have claimed war widows and war disablement pension in each year since 1980. [1659]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the tables:

Child Support Agency

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases a separated husband and wife have both sold their homes following a maintenance award made by the Child Support Agency. [2221]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information requested is not available. The maintenance assessment formula ensures that parents with care and the vast majority of absent parents have their housing costs taken fully into account.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what precautions the Child Support Agency takes to ensure that no child is rendered homeless as a result of its assessments. [2385]

Mr. Mitchell: Absent parents who have children living with them have their housing costs taken fully into account when their maintenance payments are assessed.

Where the agency needs to consider enforcement action, it is required by law to have regard to the welfare of any child likely to be affected by its decision.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many type D interim assessments have been issued by the Child Support Agency. [2014]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 27 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency Type 'D' interim assessments.

The type 'D' interim assessment was introduced in April 1995 to make interim assessments on cases where the absent parent has exceptionally high earnings. At 30 September 1995 this measure had been used in eight cases.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the weekly maintenance due via the Child Support Agency's collection service in (a) cases which are fully paid and (b) cases which are partially paid. [2020]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 27 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about cases using the Child Support Agency collection service.

Information on these cases is not available in the form you have requested. However, the average amount of maintenance assessment in cases with an interim assessment is £95. In cases with a full maintenance assessment, when the absent parent has earned income, the average amount is £39.69.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases a Child Support Agency assessment is limited by (a) the protected income formula and (b) the 30 per cent. rule; and what are the amounts of weekly maintenance due in these cases. [2012]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 27 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency assessments.

The increase of protected income to 70% of net income was one of a number of policy changes introduced in April 1995. It was introduced to ensure that after a maintenance assessment, an absent parent retained a minimum guaranteed income, and at the time 18,752 cases benefitted.

Specific information is not available on the impact of this policy change on the amount of child maintenance payable in each individual case. However, I can tell you that as a result of all the changes in April where liability decreased, the average maintenance assessment reduced from £60.64 to £52.31.

I am afraid I cannot establish what subject you are asking for information in relation to the "20 per cent" rule. The April policy changes did not include any such measure. If you write to me explaining what you are interested in, I will do my best to help.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what agencies, Government Departments or other sources the Child Support Agency has received from, or supplied to, information related to clients. [2015]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 27 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about information related to clients.

The Child Support Agency is registered with the Data Protection Registrar's Office in accordance with the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

This registration includes details of the possible sources, from which we may require information and to whom such information may be disclosed. The information is shown on the attached table.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases (a) which are fully paid and (b) which are partially paid, absent parents are paying child support maintenance by way of a deduction of earnings order. [2019]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 27 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about deduction of earnings orders.

The number of absent parents who were paying their child maintenance by way of a deduction of earnings order since April 1995 is 28,302. It is not possible to break this figure down into full or partial payments.

I hope this is helpful.

Housing Benefit

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the total amounts paid to recipients of housing benefit in (a) Humberside, (b) Hull, (c) North Yorkshire, (d) Leeds, (e) Bradford and (f) Sheffield in (i) 1991–92 and (ii) 1993–94; and if he will estimate the amounts likely to be paid out in the current year; [2146]

(2) what were the total amounts paid to recipients of housing benefit in Bridlington in (a) 1991–92 and (b) 1993–94; and if he will estimate the amounts likely to be paid out in the current year. [2147]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is not available in the format requested. Expenditure figures for Bridlington are included in those given for East Yorkshire district council which administers housing benefit in the Bridlington area.

Housing benefit expenditure

£ million

Counties	1991–92	1993–94
Humberside	85.9	116.1
North Yorkshire	44.4	66.3

Districts	1991–92	1993–1994

East Yorkshire	7.3	10.8
Kingston upon Hull	42.8	55.3
Leeds	83.7	109.8
Sheffield	63.7	84.6

Expenditure shown for Humberside includes the amounts shown for East Yorkshire and Kingston upon Hull.

Estimates for expenditure during 1995–1996 are not available.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of those claimants appealing against the results of the all-work test for incapacity benefit have had their appeals upheld. [2085]

Mr. Burt: As at 31 October 1995, 354 appeals against decisions on incapacity benefit entitlement following application of the all-work test had been heard. In 146 cases—41 per cent.—the appeal tribunal found in the appellant's favour.

Benefit Uprating

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the new rates of benefit proposed from April 1996. [3231]

Mr. Lilley: As usual, the annual uprating of social security benefits will take place in the first full week of the tax year. In 1996, this will be the week beginning on 8 April.

Expenditure on social security will be £90 billion in 1996–97, £93 billion in 1997–98 and £96 billion in 1998–99.

I have reviewed social security benefits in accordance with section 150 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. My proposals, which are set out in the schedule, will increase most of the major benefits in line with inflation. The statutory instruments to implement them will be laid before both Houses for debate. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland proposes to introduce similar changes for Northern Ireland.

All national insurance benefits will be uprated in line with the annual increase in the retail prices index up to September, which this year is 3.9 per cent.

Income-related benefits will generally rise by 3 per cent., in line with the Rossi index—RPI less certain housing costs.

As a first step in restructuring benefits for lone parents, one parent benefit and the income-related benefit lone parent premiums will not be increased in 1996.

Some key points of the 1996 increases are:

Retirement pension

The standard rate of retirement pension will be increased by £2.30 per week for a single person to £61.15 and by £3.65 per week for couples to £97.75.

Incapacity benefit

The basic rate of long term incapacity benefit will rise to £61.15 per week from £58.85, an increase of £2.30 per week.

Unemployment benefit

Unemployment benefit for a single person under pension age will rise from £46.45 to £48.25 per week.

Child benefit

Child benefit will again be raised in line with prices. For the first or eldest eligible child the weekly rate will increase from £10.40 to £10.80 and for each subsequent child the rate will rise from £8.45 to £8.80.

War pensions

War pensions will again be uprated fully in line with prices.

Non-dependant deductions

Increases will be made to deductions from housing benefit, income support and council tax benefit in respect of non-dependant adults living in the claimant's home. The income thresholds will also be increased so that non-dependants can earn more before a higher deduction band takes effect.

NB —The Overlapping Benefits Regulations provide for the rate of child dependency increases, guardian's allowance and child special allowance to be adjusted where the increase or allowance is payable for the eldest eligible child for whom Chb is also payable. The weekly rate of the increase or allowance is reduced by the differential (less the 75p derived from the Oct 1991 increase in Chb) between the rate of Chb payable for the oldest eligible child and that payable for a subsequent child. This gives a rate of £9.85 (1995) and £9.90 (1996).

For deaths occurring before 11 April 1988 refer to age points shown in brackets.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy when details of the April 1996 benefit uprating are released to list (a) for each benefit and each capital or income limit which is not to be increased in April 1996, the reasons for not doing so and (b) the current value of each such benefit or limit and the value which would have resulted from increasing it in line with prices and average earnings since it was last increased or since it was introduced. [1089]

Mr. Burt: No. The announcement of benefit rates from April 1996 is in a similar format to previous years.

National Insurance Contributions Review

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has yet completed his review of national insurance contributions for 1996–97. [3232]

Mr. Lilley: I have completed the annual review under section 141 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. My proposals will take effect from 6 April 1996. There will be no change to the standard rates of contributions for either employees or employers. The rates will remain at 10 per cent. and 10.2 per cent. respectively, but from April 1997, I intend to reduce the main rate of contributions for employers by 0.2 per cent. The savings to employers from this measure will be equivalent to the money raised from the landfill tax. The national insurance contribution holiday for employers, also announced in last year's Budget, will take effect from 6 April 1996. This will effectively remove the national insurance costs for employers for up to a year when they take on someone who has been out of work for at least two years. I am reducing the rate of class 4 contributions paid by self-employed earners by 1.3 per cent. to 6 per cent. This will more than offset the effect of the abolition of the tax relief for class 4 contributions announced by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Employers and employees

In line with the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions is to be raised to £61 a week. It is set at the level of the basic retirement pension rate for single person from April 1996, rounded down to the nearest pound.

The upper earnings limit is to be raised to £455 a week which is slightly less than seven and a half times the new basic pension rate as provided by the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992. These new earnings limits will replace the current ones of £58 and £440 respectively.

Employees whose earnings reach the lower earnings limit will continue to pay an initial contribution of 2 per cent. of that limit and standard rate contributions of 10 per cent. on that portion of their earnings which exceeds the lower but not the upper earnings limit.

For employers, the three lower contribution rates remain unchanged at 3 per cent., 5 per cent. and 7 per cent. respectively. The thresholds for these rates will be raised so that from April 1996 they apply to weekly earnings which fall below £110, £155 and £210 respectively, compared with £105, £150 and £205 at present.

Not contracted out employees and their employers

Neither employees nor employers will have to pay any contributions if earnings are less than £61 a week. Employees whose earnings do not exceed £440, the former upper earnings limit, will pay 24p a week less in contributions than at present. This is because a further £3 of their weekly earnings will be subject to the 2 per cent. rate rather than 10 per cent. For employees with earnings above £440, the maximum possible increase will be £1.26 per week.

There will be no change for most employers, but some employers will pay less as a result of the increase in the earnings thresholds. For example, where earnings fall between £205 and £209.99, employers will pay between £6.56 and £6.72 a week less.

Contracted out employees and their employers

Employees with earnings between £61 and £440, the former upper earnings limit, will usually pay 18p a week less. For those who earn more than £440, the maximum possible increase will be £1.05 per week.

Where earnings are less than £440, most employers will pay 9p a week extra. This is due to the increase in the lower earnings limit which means that a further £3 of earnings is not subject to the contracted-out rebate. Some employers will pay less as a result of the increase in the earnings thresholds. For example, where earnings fall between £205 and £209.99, employers will pay between £6.47 and £6.63 a week less. Where earnings reach or exceed £455, employers will pay 36p a week less.

Self-employed people

The flat rate class 2 contribution will be raised by 30p to £6.05 a week.

The rate of class 4 contributions will be reduced by 1.3 per cent. to 6 per cent. The annual limits of profits between which class 4 contributions are paid will be raised to £6,860 and £23,660 from £6,640 and £22,880 respectively.

Self-employed people who pay only class 2 contributions will pay an extra £15.60 a year in 1996–97.

All self-employed people who pay class 2 and class 4 contributions will pay less, ranging from a few pence a year less for those with profits of £6,860, the new lower profits limit to £208.72 a year less for those with profits of £22,880, the former upper profits limit.

Class 3 (voluntary) contributions

The rate of class 3 contributions will be raised by 30p to £5.95 a week.

National health service allocation

The allocation to the national health service is unchanged at 1.05 per cent. from employees and 0.9 per cent. from employers.

Treasury grant

The general increase in contributory benefit expenditure, which I am maintaining, means that the outgoings of the national insurance fund will continue to exceed income. In accordance with section 2(2) of the Social Security Act 1993, I propose to maintain the level of the fund in 1996–97 by means of a grant from the Treasury. I estimate that the grant required will be approximately £2.2 billion.

As usual, I shall lay a draft order before Parliament, with a report by the Government Actuary describing the effects of my proposals.

Mortgage Protection Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a summary of the information he has obtained about the quality, availability and cost of mortgage protection insurance. [897]

Mr. Roger Evans: A summary of the information requested has been placed in the Library.

Housing Costs (Domestic Violence)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if the easement which enables women who have been deserted by their partners and who make an application for income support after 1 October to have their housing costs treated as existing housing costs, will include women who have been subjected to domestic violence and have taken legal action to exclude their partner from the house; [2787]

(2) how he will establish that adjudication officers in judging that a woman who had been the victim of domestic violence and had taken legal action to exclude her partner from the house, had been abandoned, had interpreted statute law correctly. [2788]

Mr. Roger Evans: Our intention is that this easement should apply to any lone parent who claims income support as a result of being deserted by his or her partner. This should not preclude a claimant in the circumstances outlined in the question from benefiting from it. However, decisions on the application of the income support regulations to individual claims are taken by the independent adjudicating authorities after applying the regulations to the circumstances of the individual case. The operation of all aspects of the new rules on income support help with mortgage interest payments, including this easement, will be kept under review.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many statutory instruments his Department sponsored in the last Session of Parliament; and how many of these (a) constituted a new rule or regulation, (b) were introduced to implement European Community directives and (c) amplify the minimum standards set out in an original European Community directive. [2458]

Mr. Heald: The number of statutory instruments sponsored by the Department of Social Security in the last Session of Parliament was 71. Of these, one consolidated existing legislation: the remainder therefore constituted new legislation. None were introduced to implement European Community directives and none amplified the minimum standards set out in a European Community directive.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current weekly and monthly earnings limits which do not require a person to make national insurance contributions or to be allocated a national insurance number; and what is the current estimate of the numbers of people to whom these exemptions apply. [2548]

Mr. Heald: The current weekly and monthly earnings limits below which an employee is not required to pay contributions are £58 and £252 respectively. In any week, some 3 million people are estimated to have earnings below £58. Any individual who enters employment and does not already have a national insurance number is required to apply for one to the Secretary of State, irrespective of the level of earnings.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many spare national insurance numbers exist at the present time.

Mr. Heald: There is technically no such thing as a "spare" national insurance number, or NINO. NINOs are unique reference numbers allocated to individuals. These NINOs are kept by the individual throughout their lifetime.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances an employer is not required to ask a new employee for his or her national insurance number. [2721]

Mr. Heald: The administration of the national insurance scheme is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 28 November 1995:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency. I have been asked to reply to your question about the circumstances in which an employer is not required to ask a new employee for his or her National Insurance (NI) number.

An employer is required by law to ask all new employees for their NI Number where their earnings reach or exceed the prescribed level at which National Insurance contributions (NICs) become payable.

The NI Number is a unique reference number which is used by the Department of Social Security to identify a customer's NI record. Its use ensures that NICs paid or credited are put on the right record so that contributors will receive the correct rate of benefit when they make a claim. The NI Number is also used by Inland Revenue as reference for Pay As you Earn (PAYE) purposes. The Contributions Agency issues guidance to employers which stresses the importance of asking all new employees for their NI Number as soon as possible after they start work.

It is in employees' own interests to give their NI Number to their employer. If, however, an employee does not know his or her NI Number, the Contributions Agency provides clear guidance to employers on what to do to get that number.

I hope that my reply proves helpful. Please let me know if I can be of any further assistance.

Income Support

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the maximum financial benefit available to claimants or families in receipt of income support in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) 1990; and when it was last uprated. [3096]

Mr. Roger Evans: It is not possible to give figures in answer as income support, and supplementary benefit before it, is made up of different elements paid to people according to their circumstances. There is no single maximum amount available to claimants.

The amount of supplementary benefit and income support available has always varied according to the age and the size of the claimant's family as well as any other commitments such as a rent or mortgage liability. In addition, supplementary benefit included exceptional circumstances additions, further reflecting individual household variations. Income support was last uprated in April 1995.

Statutory Fees

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the annual income from (a) fees, (b) charges and (c) fines; what was the total number of staff employed (i) part time and (ii) full time; and what was the contribution his Department has made in the last three years in respect of (1) the Contributions Agency and (2) the Occupational Pensions Board. [2745]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Figures are not available for fines due to the following reasons:

Contributions Agency

Any fines for non-compliance with national insurance regulations are imposed by the courts and no income is received by the agency or Department.

Occupational Pensions Board

Any fines would be imposed by the courts but no court action has been taken by the OPB in the period concerned.

The available information is set out in the tables:

Occupational pensions board[1, 2] (OPB)	2,746,131	1,393,487	1,608,639

[1] The current Pensions Levy on Occupational and Personal Pension Schemes was introduced with effect from January 1991 to meet some of the costs arising from three separate bodies, the Pensions Ombudsman, the Pensions Registry and the Occupational Pensions Advisory Service which is funded through a grant made by OPB. Only the last two of these form part of the running costs of the OPB. The total sum raised cannot be disaggregated to provide only the part used to fund the OPB.

[2] Amounts of Pensions Levy collected is normally paid according to a three-yearly cycle under which only a third of scheme pay in any one year. Special introductory arrangements covering the payments due between 1 January 1991 and 31 March 1995 required all schemes to pay the levy in 1992–93 and resulted in higher than usual revenue for that year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoner Statistics

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the ethnic breakdown of all prisoners in England and Wales at the last available date. [1531]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. A. J. Beith, dated 28 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for the ethnic breakdown of the current prison population.

The information is shown in the attached table.

Prison population on 31 October 1995[1] by ethnic origin and sex, England and Wales

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the ethnic breakdown of all prisoners received into prisons in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [1532]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr A.J. Beith, dated 28 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for the ethnic breakdown for all prisoners received into prison in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Information is only available for the last 5 years and is shown in the attached table.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a breakdown of the number of people in prison at the most recent count by (a) sex, (b) age group and (c) ethnic group; if he will publish the same figures for 3 May 1979; and if he will make a statement. [1533]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. A. J. Beith, dated 28 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for a breakdown of the current prison population by sex, age group and ethnic origin and for the same breakdown on 3 May 1979.

Table one gives the age, sex and ethnic origin breakdown of the population for latest available date, 31 October 1995. Information on the ethnic breakdown of the prison population for 1979 is not available. An age and sex breakdown is available for June 1979 and is given in table two.

Justice Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Justice Council held on 23 to 24 November, giving details of all votes and all decisions which were determined by unanimity or without dissension. [1600]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 27 November 1995]: My right hon. and learned Friend represented the United Kingdom at the Council which was held in Brussels on 23 November.

The Council agreed as A points, among other things, a draft resolution on the protection of witnesses, a draft decision on monitoring the implementation of texts adopted regarding admission of third country nationals, reports on the activities of the Europol drugs unit during the first half of 1995 and its programme of activities for the first half of 1996, the rules of procedure of the Europol management board, a draft report on simplified extradition procedure and a draft resolution on the status of third country nationals residing legally in the territory of member states of the European Union.

Following discussion, the Council agreed to a joint position on the definition of refugee status, a joint action on airport transit visas, a report on organised crime in 1994, and standard re-admission clauses for mixed agreements with third countries. The Council discussed the question of European Court of Justice jurisdiction in the Dublin convention which deals with the determination of the state responsible for examining applications for asylum lodged in one of the EU member states. The Council noted the current situation with regard to the draft external frontiers convention and discussed the challenge represented by drug trafficking. The insolvency convention was opened for signature and signed by 12 member states.

The Council had a full discussion on the issue of European Court of Justice jurisdiction in the Europol convention and on the difficulties for the United Kingdom presented by the draft joint action on racism and xenophobia. The Council also examined the draft protocol to the convention on fraud against the revenues of the European Community and the draft convention dealing with matrimonial matters. A number of issues relating to extradition were considered, and the Council discussed proposals my right hon. and learned Friend put forward to enhance co-operation in the fight against terrorism.

The Council received information from the presidency relating to EU relations with third countries and with the European Parliament in the fields covered by title VI of the treaty of European Union. It also examined certain procedural questions regarding working methods, decision-taking and finance.

Together with his colleagues, my right hon. and learned Friend signed a memorandum of understanding on the legal interception of telecommunications.

Child Murder (Joint Enterprises)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about joint enterprise cases in which a child loses its life. [2308]

Mr. Maclean: We have examined the relevant legal provisions to see whether there is any scope for changes to make it easier to secure convictions in joint enterprise cases in which a child dies. We have, however, been unable to identify any option for reform which would not itself create further injustice. The priority must be to obtain sufficient evidence in each case pointing to the guilt of one or both parties. The provisions of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 will make it more difficult for those who are guilty of such appalling crimes to hide behind their silence in police interviews and at trial. We will keep the law under review and consider any practical proposals for reform.

Murder Victims (Family Compensation)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make it his policy to allow the families of (a) all murder victims, (b) parents of adult victims, (c) the adult children of murder victims, (d) the unmarried partners of murder victims and (e) the fathers of illegitimate murder victims who applied for compensation under the tariff-based scheme of criminal injury compensation which was announced in April 1994 and subsequently withdrawn to make a new application under the terms of the new scheme he proposes to implement from April 1996 under the terms of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act 1995. [2309]

Mr. Maclean: All applications received under the former tariff scheme fall to be considered or reconsidered under the terms of the 1990 scheme as the only scheme lawfully in force. To allow applicants in any particular category to withdraw a claim lodged between 1 April 1994 and 5 April 1995 and then reapply under the proposed new scheme would be wrong in principle and anomalous in practice.

Not all applicants in the categories mentioned who were eligible under the former tariff scheme are ineligible under the 1990 scheme. For example, parents of adult victims may have been dependent on their children and thus qualify for an award in respect of that dependency; so too might a common law spouse dependent on the deceased partner. There may be cases where such a claim either fails, or is treated less generously under the 1990 scheme criteria than might be the case under the proposed new tariff scheme. But we cannot reasonably adopt an arrangement whereby applicants since 1 April 1994 can select which scheme they wish to be bound by according to the perceived advantages and disadvantages.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were received from the families of murder victims in general and specifically from (a) parents of adult victims, (b) the adult children of murder victims, (c) the married partners of murder victims and (d) the fathers of illegitimate murder victims, under the tariff-based scheme of criminal injury compensation which was announced in April 1994 and subsequently withdrawn. [2293]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 November 1995]: A total of 1,246 applications in respect of fatal cases were received under the former tariff scheme. All applications received under that scheme are subject to consideration or reconsideration under the 1990 scheme. That has meant making changes to the data held and dispersing the case papers to board members and staff for assessment. A precise analysis of the relationship between the applicant and the victim, and the other data requested, are not therefore readily available and could not be provided without disproportionate effort. The board has, however, provided the following summary of the position.

A total of 1,192 fatal applications were outstanding when the tariff scheme was withdrawn. About a third were from a parent or parents, some 30 per cent. were in respect of children under 18 years of age, about 20 per cent. were from children aged 18 or over, and some 15 per cent. were from spouses, whether formally married or regarded as a spouse in common law.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was paid out to the families or murder victims in total and specifically to (a) parents of adult victims, (b) the adult children of murder victims and (c) the unmarried partners or murder victims and (d) the fathers of illegitimate murder victims under the tariff-based scheme of criminal injury compensation which was announced in April 1994 and subsequently withdrawn. [2295]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 November 1995]: The board advises that precise figures are not readily available.

Its estimate is that 40 applications resulted in provisional payment of awards, including funeral expenses, totalling some £200,000.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total cost involved if all applications received from the families of murder victims and specifically from (a) parents of adult victims, (b) the adult children of murder victims, (c) the unmarried partners of murder victims and (d) the fathers of illegitimate murder victims were to be paid under the terms set out in the tariff-based scheme of criminal injury compensation which was announced in April 1994 and subsequently withdrawn. [2294]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 November 1995]: Taking account of the proportion of cases which might have failed the eligibility criteria—perhaps 20 per cent.—the total cost might have been of the order of £5 million. Assuming that 250 eligible applicants were from the specific categories mentioned, the estimate for these is in the range £1.25–£2.5 million.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the annual saving to business which will accrue from (a) the Deregulation (Greyhound Racing) Order 1995 and (b) the Deregulation (Sunday Dancing) Order 1995. [2024]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 27 November 1995]: It is estimated that the proposal in the Deregulation (Greyhound Racing) Order to remove the requirement for an accountant to be present when the Tote is operated will result in cost savings of £260,000 a year. In addition the industry estimates that inter-track betting will increase turnover by 10 to 15 per cent. in its first year of operation. Details of compliance costs are given in the explanatory memorandum.

No direct cost savings were anticipated as a consequence of the Deregulation (Sunday Dancing) Order. The industry expected that the order would create new market opportunities and resultant financial benefits although these could not be quantified.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs to public funds involved in preparing the cost-benefit assessment contained in the explanatory memorandum for (a) the Deregulation (Greyhound Racing) Order 1995 and (b) the Deregulation (Sunday Dancing) Order 1995. [2023]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 27 November 1995]: Details of costs and benefits were sought as part of the public consultation exercise on the proposed Deregulation (Greyhound Racing) Order 1995 and the Deregulation (Sunday Dancing) Order.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many statutory instruments his Department sponsored in the last Session of Parliament; and how many of these (a) constituted a new rule or regulation, (b) were introduced to implement European Community directives and (c) amplify the minimum standards set out in an original European Community directive. [2456]

Mr. Howard: In the Session November 1994 to October 1995, 64 statutory instruments—excluding commencement orders—were made. Of these five related to changes in fee levels affecting business; nine either removed burdens on business or provided more favourable regimes; two, relating to video recordings, tightened the law. The remainder had no significant impact on business.

Only one of the statutory instruments implemented a European Community directive, and none amplified standards set out in an original European Community directive.

Departmental Drugs Branch

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list annual income from (a) fees, (b) charges and (c) fines what was the total number of staff employed (i) part time and (ii) full time; and what contribution his Department has made towards the annual running costs in each of the past three years in respect of the drugs branch of his Department. [2750]

Mr. Maclean: Drugs branch is a centrally funded part of the Home Office drugs division. It has four part-time and 28 full-time staff. Annual income from fees—there are no charges or fines—and running costs for each of the past three year were as follows:

	Fees (£)	Fees (£)
1993–94	358,991	882,418

Immigration (DNA)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dependants aged over 21 years have been allowed to enter the United Kingdom since the Government accepted DNA evidence as conclusive evidence of a relationship; and how many such dependants were allowed to enter the United Kingdom following decisions by Ministers to exercise their discretion exceptionally outside the immigration rules. [2549]

Mr Kirkhope: The information requested is not available. No separate statistics are maintained of dependants over the age of 21 admitted as a result of conclusive DNA evidence.

Witnesses (Media Payments)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has regarding changes in the law relating to newspapers offering money to a witness in a criminal trial before that witness has given evidence in court. [511]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 20 November 1995]: The Government are concerned about the potential impact of payments to witnesses in criminal proceedings. We have sought reports from prosecuting counsel and others on the effect of such payments in the Rosemary West trial and will consider urgently, in the light of those reports, what further action is needed.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases in which people whose applications for political asylum were under consideration were not determined at the closest date to 31 December 1994 for which figures are available. [3143]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 31 December 1994, there were 55,225 applications for asylum awaiting initial decisions. The number of people who had claimed asylum and were being detained on this date is not known. As at 18 November 1994, 654 persons, who at some stage had sought asylum including those awaiting removal following refusal of their applications as well as those whose applications were under consideration or subject to appeal, were being held in detention.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum have been rejected on safe third country grounds to date. [1671]

Mr. Kirkhope: A total of 865 asylum applications were refused on safe third country grounds in 1994 and 1,205 in the first nine months of 1995. A nationality split is available in table 4.3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin, "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issue 15/95. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Ms Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the short procedure pilot scheme introduced in May 1995 for processing asylum claims. [1689]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend on Monday 20 November, at column 335-38.

Ms Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications are currently waiting to be heard. [1686]

Mr. Kirkhope: A total of 66,665 asylum applications were awaiting an initial decision as at 31 October 1995.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers whose cases (a) have yet to be determined and (b) have been determined are (i) currently detained and (ii) currently detained in prisons; and what is the average period of their detention. [986]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 21 November 1995, a total of 776 persons who had at some stage sought asylum were detained. This figure includes people awaiting removal following refusal of their applications as well as those whose applications were under consideration or subject to appeal. Of this figure, 267 had been in detention less than one month, 99 between one and two months, 304 between two and six months, 89 between six and 12 months, and 17 had been detained for longer than 12 months.

Information on the stage of application and place of detention of people who have sought asylum is given in the table.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the number of asylum seekers currently detained under Immigration Act powers by (a) nationality, (b) gender, (c) length of detention, (d) place of detention and (e) immigration status at the time of application. [549]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 21 November 1995, a total of 776 persons who had at some stage sought asylum were detained. This figure includes people awaiting removal following refusal of their applications as well as those whose applications were under consideration or subject to appeal. Of this figure, 267 had been in detention less than one month, 99 between one and two months, 304 between two and six months, 89 between six and 12 months, and 17 had been detained for longer than 12 months.

Information on the gender, immigration status, nationality and location of those detained, as at 21 November 1995, is provided in tables 1 to 3.

External Frontiers Convention

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals have emerged from within (a) the Council of Ministers and (b) the Justice and Home Affairs Council to resolve disputes between member states with regard to the draft convention on external borders. [2827]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 27 November 1995]: At its meeting on 23 November the Justice and Home Affairs Council received a progress report on the state of discussions on the draft external frontiers convention. The report recorded the presidency's hope that outstanding issues could be resolved as soon as possible. A copy of the progress report is being placed in the Library.

Nigerian Criminals

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the national criminal intelligence service has to conduct an inquiry into the flow of currency between Nigeria and Britain. [2810]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer on 27 November 1995]: None. The national criminal intelligence service is already aware of the threat to the United Kingdom posed by some Nigerian criminals and monitors the situation on a regular basis.

Asylum and Immigration

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he held, and from which bodies he sought information, opinions and advice about asylum and immigration problems. [2538]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 27 November 1995]: We discuss these matters regularly with a wide range of organisations.

Ethnic Minority Business Group

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often the ethnic minority business advisory group meets; when it last met; who are its members; and what issues it is currently pursuing. [1936]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The ethnic minority business advisory group last met on 20 September 1994. It was formally disbanded in September 1995. Its membership consisted of ethnic minority business agencies, representatives of mainstream businesses and organisations, and Government Departments.

Oleoresin Capsicum

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the police or Prison Service are considering oleoresin capsicum as a possible chemical incapacitant for use in their operations; [2369]

(2) what (a) biomedical and (b) other technical testing of the chemical agent oleoresin capsicum have recently been carried out by the police scientific development branch, with particular reference to the effects of the agents when dispersed as an aerosol spray; with what results; and what further testing or trials of OC currently are taking place or planned; [2368]

(3) what recent (a) biomedical or (b) other technical testing of the chemical agent oleoresin capsicum has recently been carried out by his Department; and with what results. [2317]

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office police scientific development branch has reviewed all the available information about the effects of incapacitant products containing oleoresin capsicum. In addition, research commissioned by my right hon. and learned Friend has been undertaken into the possible carcinogenic effects of oleoresin capsicum's main incapacitating ingredient, capsaicin. That research indicates that capsaicin is not a genotoxic carcinogen.

My right hon. and learned Friend has, however, concluded, in consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers, that currently too little is known about oleoresin capsicum's effects on health for it to be considered for use by the police in this country.

Further work has been undertaken to determine methods of analysing oleoresin capsicum products. The Home Office police scientific development branch will continue to review any relevant research undertaken elsewhere.

The Prison Service has no proposals to use products containing oleoresin capsicum at this time.

Police Gallantry Awards

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the rules governing the recommendations for gallantry awards to police officers, with particular reference to the circumstances in which a lesser award may be made than the one for which a recommendation has been made. [2237]

Mr. Maclean: There are four categories of civilian gallantry award which may be made to police officers:

(i) of the highest order (George cross)

(ii) of an extremely high order (George medal)

(iii) of a high order (Queen's gallantry medal)

(iv) not up to the foregoing standards, but entailing risk to life and meriting recognition (Queen's commendation for bravery or the Queen's commendation for bravery in the air)

The category for which a case may be considered depends on the circumstances of the case and partly upon the risk of death to the person being nominated.

There are three main factors which must be evident in the actions taken. Firstly, the act of bravery must be carried out in the knowledge of the risk. Secondly the act must show persistence in the face of danger and, thirdly, there must have been a degree of choice in taking positive action. A lesser award will be made than the one recommended if the circumstances of the case do not merit a higher award.

Princess of Wales

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis is taking to investigate allegations by the Princess of Wales that her telephone calls were illegally intercepted. [2366]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that no such formal complaint has been received.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by substance the total volume of illegal drugs seized by law enforcement agencies in Britain annually since 1984. [2124]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is contained in tables 2.4 and 2.5 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin, "Statistics of drug seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1993", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total sums spent by law enforcement agencies in Britain in detecting and seizing illegal drugs annually since 1984 in constant prices. [2122]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available. The sums spent on tackling drug trafficking cannot be separated from expenditure on other aspects of law enforcement.

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate and list by substance the total volume of illegal drugs available for sale in Britain annually since 1984. [2123]

Mr. Maclean: Since drug misuse is a clandestine activity, it is impossible to estimate the volume of controlled drugs which is circulating illegally.

Police Support Functions

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued to chief constables in England and Wales regarding the outsourcing and privatisation of police support functions. [2128]

Mr. Maclean: It is the Government's policy to introduce the benefits of the market place to police support functions by extending compulsory competitive tendering to these areas. In support of this policy, the Home Office issued guidance earlier this year on the cleaning of police buildings, 19 April, on police legal services—2 March on police construction-related and property services—2 March, and on police personnel service—9 November.

Summer Time

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the current policy of putting back the clocks by one hour at the end of the summer. [2130]

Mr. Kirkhope: This system of operating without summer time and keeping the clocks on Greenwich mean time plus one hour throughout the year was tried between 1968 and 1971. We have no plans to revert to it.

Prison Ombudsman

Mr Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many cases from Doncaster prison the prisons ombudsman has reported: and if he will make a statement. [2274]

Miss Widdecombe: Since the prisons ombudsman began to take complaints from prisoners on 24 October 1994 he has received 26 complaints from Doncaster. Twenty of these were ineligible—19 because the prison has not exhausted the internal request complaint system and one because it came from a third party. The eligibility of two cases is currently being considered. Investigations have taken place into the remaining three complaints and in one of these cases the complaint was upheld. This case involved property stolen from a prisoner's cell, apparently as a result of a design fault in the cell windows at Doncaster. The prison ombudsman recommended that the prisoner involved should receive compensation for the loss and the Prison Service accepted this recommendation.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attempted suicides and suicides have occurred in each prison for each year since 1992. [2139]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter had been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 28 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about suicides in Prison Service Establishments since 1992.

The attached table gives the number of reported incidents of attempted suicide and the number of self inflicted deaths at each establishment for the years 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995 (to 21 November).

South Africa (Oil Embargo)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were successfully brought against individuals and organisations who breached the oil embargo against South Africa. [2243]

Mr. Maclean: Court proceedings data held centrally by my Department do not identify this type of offence.

Children's Certificates

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a standardised system for the issue of children's certificate liquor licences. [2126]

Mr. Kirkhope: Among the questions we are considering in our review of the operation of the system of children's certificates is whether there is a need for greater uniformity in the terms on which they are granted.

National Lottery

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to ensure that applications from animal welfare charities for lottery funding are considered; [2318]

(2) what representations he has received from animal welfare charities on the allocation of funds arising from the national lottery. [2319]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have received a number of such representations. The national lottery charities board is responsible for distributing part of national lottery proceeds allocated for charitable expenditure. My right hon. and learned Friend has issued directions to the board. These require it to take into account the need to ensure over time the distribution of money to a reasonably wide spread and range of recipients, including small organisations and those operating purely at a local level. The board—after consultation with the sector, including animal welfare charities—has announced themes for future grant rounds which reflect this direction. Animal welfare charities are welcome to apply for grants, and in doing so will no doubt take account of the programme announced by the board.

Invoices

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many orders and firms are represented by the 8 per cent. of invoices not paid by his Department within 30 days or in accordance with contractual agreements in 1994–95; and how many of these are related to firms with fewer than 500 employees. [939]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 November 1995]: The number of invoices not paid by my Department within 30 days or in accordance with contractual agreements in 1994–95 was approximately 46,400 out of a total of 580,000 valid invoices. Information on the number of individual purchase orders and firms to which these invoices related is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Illegal Immigration

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the employers' organisations about taking action against employers for employing illegal immigrants. [1670]

Mr. Kirkhope: Ministers have met representatives of a number of employers' organisations to discuss this matter.

Visitors

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the cost to public funds of recording the dates on which visitors to the United Kingdom leave the country. [1990]

Mr. Kirkhope: We estimate the costs of establishing and running an information technology system capable of providing such data would be £66 million over 10 years. There would also be considerable additional Immigration Service staffing and other costs.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the number of people who entered the United Kingdom on a visitor's visa since 1990 and have overstayed. [1991]

Mr. Kirkhope: As the hon. Member was informed in the replies given to his questions on 29 March 1994 at column 612 and 15 April 1994 at column 312, comprehensive information on which an estimate could be based of the number of visitors who remain in the United Kingdom after the expiry of their leave is not available.

Prison Population

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisoners currently being held in (a) Prison Service prisons and (b) privately run prisons. [1687]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 28 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners currently being held in Prison Service prisons and privately run prisons.

On 23 November 1995, 52,411 prisoners were being held in Prison Service prisons. Of these, 2,103 prisoners were being held in contractually managed establishments.

Prison Places

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional prison places he expects will be available for use by the end of 1995–96. [1693]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 28 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of additional prison places expected to be available by the end of 1995–96.

The Certified Normal Accommodation available for uses in prisons in England and Wales on 23 November 1995 was 51,328. Some 1,600 additional places are currently expected to be available by the end of March 1996.

Drug Trafficking

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average sentence handed down for trafficking in class B drugs to (a) men and (b) women. [1690]

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the table.

Average sentence length given for persons sentence to immediate custody for offences of trafficking in class B drugs by sex, type of court and type of offence, 1994

England and Wales

Type of offence	Sex	Average sentence lengths (months) Magistrates' courts	Crown court

[1] Excludes production of cannabis (growth of plant).
[2] Class of drug not separately specified.

Ministerial Proposals

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sectors of his Department have been involved in the drawing up and implementation of his proposals published on 12 October. [1902]

Mr. Howard: I draw as necessary on all the relevant parts of my Department.

Fines

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the court procedures used in (a) Scotland and (b) England for the recovery of fines as a civil debt. [1978]

Mr. Maclean: A fine imposed by a court is not a civil debt. In England and Wales, magistrates' courts have a wide range of powers to enforce payment of fines and other financial penalties. The Lord Chancellor has established a working group to identify ways of improving the effectiveness of these powers. Court procedures relating to fine enforcement in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Television Licence Fines

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total annual cost in England and Wales of imprisoning (a) men, (b) women and (c) men and women for the non-payment of a television licence fine. [1925]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 28 November 1995.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what is the total annual cost in England and Wales of imprisoning (a) men, (b) women, and (c) men and women for non-payment of a television licence fine.

Information on the cost of prisoners according to their type of offence is not collected centrally. On the basis of the number normally in custody—under 10—we estimate the costs of imprisoning these defaulters to be up to £200,000 a year, approximately 67% for men and 33% for women.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the discrepancies of imprisonment rates for television licence fine defaulters in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland. [1979]

Mr. Maclean: Imprisonment cannot be imposed for television licence evasion. It may be imposed by the courts only where an offender has failed to pay a fine imposed upon conviction for failing to have a television licence. A total of 763 people in England and Wales were imprisoned in 1994 for non payment of a fine imposed for television licence evasion. Information is not held centrally on the proportionate use of imprisonment for fine defaulters, where the fine was imposed for television licence evasion, as between England and Wales. Court procedures relating to fine enforcement in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards cutting energy consumption in Government buildings for which he has responsibility in each year since 1990. [1445]

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Construction, Planning and Energy Efficiency to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 17 May 1995, Official Report, columns 260–62.

Final figures for 1994–95 are not yet available, but are likely to be broadly in line with those for 1992–93 and 1993–94.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all those in his Department who have authority to issue public interest immunity certificates; how many such certificates have been issued in each of the last five years; and what were the main reasons for them. [1430]

Mr. Howard: A claim for public interest immunity is normally made by the appropriate Minister. Within the Home Office central records of public interest immunity certificates used in legal proceedings have only been kept since 1992. The available figures are:

Year	Number of PII certificates
1992	4
1993	5
1995	12

The certificates have been issued to protect information relating to the Security Service and information relating to the security and operation of prisons.

Prisoners, Leeds

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of inmates at Leeds gaol were (a) unemployed and (b) homeless before entering prison for each year since 1990. [1464]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. John Battle, dated 28 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the percentage of inmates at Leeds jail who were (a) unemployed and (b) homeless before entering prison for each year since 1990.

This information is not available as Leeds prison does not keep records of its previous prisoners. However, research findings from the National Prison Survey 1991 (from a random sample of the prison population) indicated that approximately 13% of the prison population had no permanent home just before imprisonment and 33% were unemployed.

Immigration

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) admissions and (b) refusals for immigration and settlement in the United Kingdom have been made in each of the last 10 years. [1551]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of persons granted and refused settlement 1985–June 1995

	Persons accepted for settlement[1]	Persons overseas initially refused[2] an entry clearance for settlement[3]	Persons in the UK initially refused[4] settlement
1985	55,360	n/a	260
1986	47,820	n/a	510
1987	45,980	n/a	540
1988	49,280	n/a	490
1989	49,650	7,290	800

NORTHERN IRELAND

Student Costs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total cost and what is the cost of (a) fees, (b) student maintenance, (c) student loans and (d) other to the Northern Ireland office of supporting students from Northern Ireland in places of higher education elsewhere in the United Kingdom. [1768]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 27 November 1995]: In the 1994–95 academic year, the total cost for Northern Ireland domiciled students on first degree, or equivalent courses at institutions of higher education elsewhere in the United Kingdom was £30.8 million. Expenditure on tuition fees was £15.4 million as was that on maintenance grant, including allowances and supplementary maintenance.

The information on loans is not readily available from the Student Loans Company and could be obtained only from the company at disproportionate cost.

Information about access funds which are administered by the higher education institutions is not available.

Student Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the ratio of provision of higher education places and qualified students in Northern Ireland, England, Wales and Scotland. [1769]

Mr. Ancram [holding reply 27 November 1995]: Available information relates to students studying in each of the four territories, and the number of students domiciled in each territory. The 1993–94 figures in respect of full-time undergraduates are as follows:

	(a) Full-time undergraduate students studying in territory	(b) Full-time undergraduate students domiciled in territory	(c) Ratio of places : students (a) : (b)
Northern Ireland	23,000	30,200	0.8 : 1
England	755,200	704,100	1.1 : 1
Wales	52,600	43,800	1.2 : 1
Scotland	117,400	92,100	1.3 : 1

Legislative Repeals and Reviews

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what legislation from his Department passed in the last five years contains provision for statutory repeal or review. [2037]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 27 November 1995]: In Northern Ireland the Emergency Provisions Act 1991 is required to be renewed annually in order to keep the statutes in force.

As part of the Government's deregulation initiative Northern Ireland Departments have been reviewing, on a regular basis, legislation which affects business.

Dry Stone Walls

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) grants and (b) other support will be available from his Department for the conservation and protection of dry stone walls from April 1996. [2329]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The only scheme with this provision in Northern Ireland will be the sub-programme for agriculture and rural development. It was suspended temporarily from 24 March 1995 to allow an assessment to be made of the financial commitments to cover the applications already received. No decision has been made yet when it can be reopened.

This scheme offered 50 per cent. grant rate on a maximum expenditure of £25,000 on a variety of items including the provision, replacement and improvement of dry stone walls.

Electricity

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals or plans have been notified to his Department to deal with increased demand for electricity in (a) Newry (b) Armagh and (c) South Armagh. [1239]

Mr. Ancram: My Department has been informed by Northern Ireland Electricity that the maximum demand in the Newry and South Armagh area is increasing by 2.7 per cent per annum and in Armagh by 2.5 per cent. per annum.

NIE plc have further advised that development plans covering these areas are currently being implemented. These include the provision of new substations, providing new 33kv and 11kv circuits, replacing obsolete equipment and carrying out extensive network refurbishment.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to resolve outstanding problems of low voltage supply in (a) Newry and (b) South Armagh. [1240]

Mr. Ancram: This is primarily a matter for Northern Ireland Electricity plc. NIE has informed my Department that it is implementing an extensive programme of works in these areas.

Camlough Lake

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in determining the future ownership and usage of Camlough lake, South Armagh. [1241]

Mr. Moss: The Department of the Environment's Water Executive inherited water abstraction rights at Camlough lake at local government reorganisation in 1973. In August 1994 it published notice of its intention to vest the bed and soil of the lake. This is necessary to ensure the sufficiency of water obtained from this source for the pubic supply and to facilitate effective protection of the quality of water supplies.

A number of representations about the vesting proposals have been received. Discussions are currently underway with objectors, including those with parallel use proposals for the lake such as recreational development and hydro-electric power generation. The Water Executive's position in such discussions is that any supplementary development must be compatible with the continuing use of the lake as a water supply source for the Newry area, especially in regard to the safeguarding of water quality. If agreement is not forthcoming in these discussions the Department will convene a local inquiry at which the outstanding issues can be presented and progress made to determining the lake's future ownership and use.

It is my understanding, as conveyed in a recent letter from my noble Friend, Baroness Denton, to the chief executive of Newry and Mourne district council, that the Director-General of Electricity Supply is still considering the complex issues involved in proposals for pumped storage electricity generation at Camlough.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of decisions to refuse incapacity benefit have been (a) overturned on appeal and (b) are pending a decision since the benefit was introduced in April; [1242]

(2) what is the total number of applications received for incapacity benefit since April; [1243]

(3) what is the average length of time taken to process an incapacity benefit appeal; [1244]

(4) how many decisions to award incapacity benefit have been issued since April; [1245]

(5) how many decisions to refuse incapacity benefit applications have been issued since April; [1246]

(6) what is the average cost of each incapacity benefit appeal. [1247]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 28 November 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary questions in which you asked for some statistical information on Incapacity Benefit.

Some 30,000 claims to Incapacity Benefit were received from 13 April 1995 to 31 October 1995. Unfortunately, records are not maintained on the actual number of claims which were either allowed or refused but I can tell you that 2474 claims were disallowed during this period solely on incapacity grounds. Not included in this figure are claims disallowed for other reasons such as insufficient contributions, last claims and dependents claims.

As we do not maintain statistics on the number of claims refused, I'm afraid I cannot provide you with the number of appeals received as a proportion of the overall number of refusals. However, a total of 358 appeals has been received by the Agency since April 1995, 50 appeals have been heard, 19 of which were allowed by the Appeal Tribunal. Of the remaining 308 appeals outstanding, 81 are awaiting hearing by an Appeal Tribunal and the remainder, the majority of which have been received within the last couple of months, are still in the process of being prepared.

Finally, the average length of time taken to process an incapacity appeal from the date of receipt in the Agency until the appeal papers are despatched to the Independent Tribunal Service for hearing is 36 working days. However, no information is available on the average cost of each incapacity appeal.

I hope you find this information helpful but if you require any further clarification please let me know.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many statutory instruments his Department sponsored in the last Session of Parliament and how many of these (a) constituted a new rule or regulation, (b) were introduced to implement European Community directives and (c) amplify the minimum standards set out in an original European Community directive. [2463]

Sir John Wheeler: Three statutory instruments were sponsored directly by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. None of these constituted a new rule or regulation. None of them were introduced to implement European Community directives.

In addition 16 Orders in Council were made in the last session of Parliament, under schedule 1 paragraph of the Northern Ireland Act 1974.

Eight of the Orders in Council constituted a new rule, that is their main purpose was not to amend, supersede or replace earlier rules or regulations.

None of the Orders in Council were introduced to implement European Community directives.

In addition, 35 statutory instruments were sponsored by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland acting with Great Britain Departments. Four of these were introduced to implement European Community directives.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Local Government

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the Acts of Parliament including consolidation Acts that affect local government that have been introduced by her Department since January 1994. [29]

Mr. Paice: There are none.

Training and Enterprise Council, Barnsley and Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC's report and accounts for 1994–95 to be published; and if she will make a statement. [2275]

Mr. Paice: The Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council's annual report for 1994–95 was published in August 1995. A copy has been placed in the Library. Further copies can be obtained by contacting the TEC.

A copy of the TEC's annual accounts for 1994–95 were lodged with Companies House in November 1995 and have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money has been allocated to the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC for training from (a) the single regeneration budget and (b) the single regeneration budget challenge fund. [2239]

Mr. Paice: The money for successful bids to the single regeneration budget challenge fund round 1 was allocated to the partnerships who submitted the bid, not to individual members of the partnership. I understand that successful bids for challenge fund round 2 are expected to be announced in December.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the level of administrative costs of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC; and if she will make a statement. [2276]

Mr. Paice: This is an operational matter for Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council.

Executive Agencies (Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each of the executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by agency staff (a) the costs of the travel, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned. [2289]

Mr. Robin Squire: Two executive agencies report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State: the Teachers' Pensions Agency and the Employment Service.

In the last financial year there was no overseas travel by staff of the Teachers' Pension Agency.

Details of overseas travel by staff of the Employment Service are not separately recorded and could not be provided without disproportionate cost. The number of Employment Service staff who travel overseas is however small. Visits are predominantly to European Union and former eastern block countries in connection with employment and training developments. The cost of some Employment Service visit is met from the know-how fund, the United Kingdom's programme of bilateral assistance to the countries of Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. Employment services are among the priorities in these countries.

Pupil Registration Regulations

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has further to update the Pupils Registration Regulations 1956.

Mr. Robin Squire: Revised and updated pupil registration regulations came into effect on 1 September 1995 and copies were sent to all schools and local education authorities in England. We will consider whether any additional guidance is necessary in the light of the West case.

Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the area of playing fields in England that has been sold off since 1981. [2672]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school playing fields have been sold in England since the introduction of regulation DES 909 in 1981. [2589]

Mrs. Gillan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 19 October, Official Report, column 376.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the value of playing fields in England that have been sold off since 1981. [2586]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is not held centrally.

Education (School Premises) Regulations

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research her Department has commissioned into the impact on children's (a) learning, (b) health, (c) safety and (d) discipline, arising from the proposed changes to the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. [2715]

Mrs. Gillan: The Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 were reviewed by officials and professional advisers in the Department and the Welsh Office. The views of LEAs, school governors, teachers' association and voluntary bodies were sought.

The changes to the regulations we are considering will safeguard the health and safety of pupils. We do not believe that the changes will have any effect on learning and discipline in schools.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what steps she is taking to ensure that (a) the number of three-and-a-half, four and five-year-olds and (b) the quality of education of this group in nursery education in Solihull will be maintained following the implementation of her nursery voucher proposals; and if she will make a statement; [2650]

(2) if she will estimate the number of local education authorities where the quality of nursery education for three-and-a-half, four and five-year-olds will (a) improve and (b) deteriorate as a result of her nursery voucher proposals; and if she will make a statement. [2675]

Mr. Robin Squire: The introduction of nursery education vouchers will be accompanied by measures to assure the quality of what is provided, which will be of benefit to parents in all areas. The funding mechanism is designed to ensure that if maintained schools continue to recruit pupils as they do now, there is no financial disadvantage. However, the number of four-year-olds in state provision will depend on parental choice, and on the response of providers to the voucher scheme.

Provision for other age groups should not be affected by the scheme.

Teachers Pensions Agency

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost of the failure to implement the Hoskyns computer system at the Teachers Pensions Agency. [2714]

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost of the failure to implement the pensions administration system forms a significant component of a claim which the Department is pursuing against Hoskyns, through litigation. Since the litigation is as yet unresolved, it would be inappropriate to provide details at this stage.

Managers (Training)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she is taking to expand the provision of postgraduate courses for the training of managers for the manufacturing sector. [2571]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for providing postgraduate courses for managers within the manufacturing sector rests with higher education institutions, who take demand from manufacturing industry into account in arranging their provision.

Furthermore, the Government are keen supporters of the use by organisations in all sectors of the national occupational standards for managers. These were developed in consultation with industry to articulate best practice by managers at all levels. They also form the basis for national vocational qualifications.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she is taking to ensure the expansion of postgraduate education successfully produces high quality industrial managers. [2679]

Mr. Forth: The Government have introduced comprehensive quality assurance arrangements within higher education which apply to all subjects, including management. The Higher Education Funding Council for England has a statutory responsibility to undertake quality assessment in specific subjects; and the Higher Education Quality Council undertakes quality audits of institutions' internal quality control systems.

In addition, the Department is taking forward its Competitiveness White Paper commitment to "look to Business Schools and others to contribute to improving the skills base by continuing improvement in the relevance and quality of courses".

This has resulted in contracts being agreed with a number of business schools to develop postgraduate level courses which are competence based and which draw where appropriate on the national management standards.

Remploy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are currently engaged in work with Remploy; and if she will indicate the locations of the work force in each case. [2662]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Barry Jones, dated 28 November 1995.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how many people are currently engaged in work with Remploy and the locations of the workforce in each case.

A total of 10,929 people, of whom 9,357 were disabled workers, were engaged in work in Remploy at the end of October 1995. 8,682 (7,110 disabled workers) were working in 102 locations and these are listed in the attached table (Annex 1). The remaining 2,247 are Interworkers who are supported by Remploy in placements with host firms but not working on Remploy premises.

I hope this is helpful.

Legislative Repeals and Reviews

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what legislation from her Department passed in the last five years contains provision for statutory repeal or review. [2028]

Mr. Paice [holding answer 27 November 1995]: Statutes frequently contain provisions for the repeal of other provisions. I am not however aware of any provision in legislation promoted by the former Department for Education or the former Employment Department in the last five years which provides for future repeal or for future review by Parliament.

Training for Work

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the number of new recruits to the training for work programme in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland in each month since January 1994. [2425]

Learning Credits

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to provide a scheme of learning credits for those aged 16 years; and if she will make a statement. [2819]

Mr. Paice: The second competitiveness White Paper: "Forging Ahead", published in May, noted that the Government remain attracted in principle to the idea of learning credits for all 16 to 19-year-olds, while recognising that it would have significant practical implications. We have invited comments on the Coopers and Lybrand study of learning credits which was also published in May. We are now considering how best to develop the idea further in the context of the Department's wider programme, set out in the White Paper, to improve education and training for 16 to 19-year-olds.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school governing bodies she has consulted in respect of modifications to their published proposals for grant-maintained status. [2894]

Mr. Robin Squire: In some 650 cases the school governing body has been consulted.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total amount of financial balances held by both local education authority and grant-maintained schools broken down by local authority. [2696]

Mr. Squire: For local education authority schools in England this information was given in respect of 1993–94 in answers to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 19 January 1995, Official Report, column 641-43 and 27 January 1995, Official Report, column 410-11. I shall write to the hon. Member when the Department has completed its examination of the local management of schools outturn statements produced by LEAS for 1994–95.

The financial monitoring of grant-maintained schools is the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will compare the trends in the examination results at grant-maintained and non-grant-maintained schools. [2879]

Mr. Squire: Over the last four years pupils at GM schools have, on average, gained better GCSE results than their LEA school counterparts, as the table shows:

Percentage of 15-year-old pupils achieving 5+ GCSE grades A[1]-C

Percentage

	1992	1993	1994	[1]1995
LEA maintained schools
Comprehensive	34.3	36.4	38.5	38.7
Selective	86.9	91.6	94.1	94.0
Modern/other	18.6	22.0	24.1	25.9
Total	35.0	37.0	39.1	39.4
Grant-maintained schools
Comprehensive	38.8	40.9	43.4	44.7
Selective	89.8	93.2	94.5	93.7
Modern/other	20.3	23.0	24.6	26.2
Total	44.9	45.3	47.4	48.8

[1] The 1995 figures are provisional.

The difference is most marked when the performance of comprehensive school pupils is compared. In 1992 38.8 per cent. of GM school pupils had gained three or more grades A to C, compared with 34.3 per cent. in LEA-maintained schools, a gap of 4.5 per cent. By 1995 this gap has risen to 6 per cent.

Information is not yet available on trends in results at GM and LEA primary schools. In 1994 the key stage 1 results for GM and LEA primary schools were as follows:

Percentage of pupils achieving level 2 or above

Reading		Writing		Number
GM	LEA	GM	LEA	GM	LEA
84	80	72	67	85	82

Equivalent information on key stage one results in 1995 will be available early in the new year, together with results for key stages 2 and 3 for the first time.

Supplementary Credit Approvals

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what applications were made by metropolitan districts for supplementary credit approvals in each of the last three years; how much of each sum granted was (a) unused or (b) not used within the time limit attached to the approval; and if she will make a statement. [2871]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested on applications is as follows:

Year	Sum of bids £ m	Number of bids
1993–94	22.9	94
1994–95	36.3	104
1995–96	43.3	103

Further bids are likely during the remainder of the 1995–96 financial year.

Information on supplementary credit approvals which authorities have not used is not held centrally.

Education, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many representations she has received about the need to maintain and improve education services in Nottinghamshire in 1996–97; if she will summaries these representations; and if she will list the individuals and organisations that have sent them. [2756]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of such representations, many of which have requested increased funding for school budgets in 1996–97. It is not possible to list the individuals and organisations that have made these representations.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many statutory instruments her Department sponsored in the last Session of Parliament; and how many of these (a) constituted a new rule or regulation, (b) were introduced to implement European Community directives and (c) amplify the minimum standards set out in an original European Community directive. [2468]

Mr. Paice: The Department for Education, Employment Department and the Department for Education and Employment sponsored a total of 92 statutory instruments of which seven wholly or partly were introduced to implement European Community directives. None of these amplify the minimum standards set out in the original directive.

Departmental Expenditure Plans

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has for her Department's expenditure in 1996–97; and if she will make a statement. [3233]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in a statement today, the Government intend to provide £14,040 million for the Department's voted expenditure in 1996–97. This will be in addition to expenditure on schools provided through the local authority finance settlement.

SCHOOLS

Provision for schools is to increase by £878 million. The bulk of this will be provided through the local authority finance settlement. Detailed allocations for individual local authorities will be announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 30 November. The local authority settlement will allow for an increase of 4.5 per cent. for schools. It is for local authorities to decide how to allocate the available funding, but the Government expect that priority will be given to schools. The total package of Government and local authority funding for schools—including provision for the under-fives—represents an increase over 1995–96 of 4.9 per cent.

Schools capital

In 1996–97, the amount available for school building will be £625 million, an increase of £40 million or 6.8 per cent. on the current year. This includes an extra £8 million for grant-maintained schools, £5 million for voluntary aided schools, and £27 million for local authority schools. Alongside these extra resources lie the new opportunities arising from the private finance initiative; the proposed legislation enabling grant-maintained schools to borrow commercially; the full use of proceeds from asset disposals by grant-maintained schools; and the relaxations on the capital controls which apply to disposals of local authority school property. Overall this is an excellent outcome which will help to maintain the school building programme at record levels and to introduce a substantial challenge fund for school renewal, further details of which will be announced shortly.

Grant-maintained Schools

The Government will continue to ensure that GM schools receive the necessary funding to meet their extra responsibilities and particular circumstances.

The plans provide for spending on special purpose grants to be maintained broadly at current levels. The Funding Agency for Schools is considering the balance of provision between the various grants.

Specialist schools

The settlement includes £23 million in 1996–97, £28 million in 1997–98 and £27 million in 1998–99 for our specialist schools programme. Already, 101 schools are operating as technology colleges and six as language colleges. The settlement, with provision higher than announced last year, will enable us to expand the network of schools to well over 250 schools by 1998–99.

Teacher Training Agency

The total grant for the Teacher Training Agency for recurrent and capital expenditure is planned at £198 million, £208 million and £214 million in 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 respectively. The grant takes account of changes in forecast student numbers which reflect, among other things, revised targets for intakes into initial teacher training courses. It also covers the Headlamp scheme, and work on the development and piloting of the new national professional qualification for headteachers.

FURTHER EDUCATION AND TRAINING

16–19 and further education student numbers

The plans provide for the forecast increase in demand from 16–19 year olds for education and training in schools, colleges or by work-based routes to be met. This will contribute to the achievement of the national targets which the Government have endorsed for the year 2000. The number of students in further education is forecast to increase by 50,000 students in 1996–97 overall and 20 per cent. in all between 1994 and 1999.

Grant to further education funding council

The total grant to the FEFC is planned at £3,069 million in 1996–97, £3,049 million in 1997–98 and £3,016 million in 1998–99. Within those totals, reflecting the priority accorded to this sector of education, the level of recurrent grant per year has been maintained at just under £2.96 billion per year, as announced a year ago. These figures imply continuing efficiency gains over the next three years to help meet the forecast increases in student numbers.

I have set as a condition of my grant to the FEFC that it requires institutions in the further education sector to take account of the principles set out in the Chancellor's statement on public sector pay of 18 September 1995. Any failure by institutions to observe these principles may be expected to have an adverse effect on the level of grant made available to the council in 1997–98.

Modern apprenticeships and youth training

Government funding on modern apprenticeships and youth training is planned to increase by £116 million next year against anticipated expenditure in 1995–96 to £783 million. Plans allow for 60,000 entrants to modern apprenticeships next year, a doubling of the number of entrants to the programme compared to the anticipated level of entrants in 1995–96.

EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING

Employment service programmes

The welcome reduction in the past year in the number of people out of work for over six months has enabled the Government to make savings in existing employment programmes. The Government have also taken the opportunity to rebalance provision so that it supports the key aims of the jobseekers allowance. The "1-2-1" programme of intensive help for individual long-term unemployed people will be more than doubled to support active job search. A new package of help and assistance with fares to interviews for people who have been unemployed for 13 weeks will be introduced. Community action will cease at the end of 1995–96, and we will conduct pilots of a programme of mandatory work experience for people out of work for two years or more, who have failed to benefit from other help provided by the Employment Service.

Training for work

The planned reduction in the number of people joining training for work next year—12 per cent.—is broadly in line with the reduction in the number of people reaching six months' unemployment. The programme will continue to focus on getting more trainees into jobs. Participation on the programme of people with special needs, and younger long-term unemployed people, will be maintained at broadly the same levels as this year.

Lifetime learning

The major programme initiatives to support lifetime learning—skills for small businesses and employer investment in people—are being broadly maintained at their previously planned levels. Over the survey period some £150 million is planned to be spent encouraging employers to invest in the training and development of their employees.

Jobseeker's allowance

The provision that my Department has been given will include the resources required to introduce JSA in October 1996. We regard JSA as a most important step in our wide-ranging labour market reforms.

Total opportunities

Overall, some 1.5 million opportunities will be provided for unemployed people in 1996–97, broadly the same level as in the current year.

TRAINING AND ENTERPRISE COUNCILS

Provision for programmes delivered by training and enterprise councils, at £1,437 million is set to rise by 5 per cent. from anticipated expenditure this year. TEC budgets, within these programmes, are estimated at £1,173 million, 5 per cent. more than forecast expenditure by TECs this year.

HIGHER EDUCATION

The Government have maintained their plans for student numbers in higher education. Within the planned totals, it should be possible for universities and colleges to expand further the numbers of part-time students and to keep the participation rate for young people at over 30 per cent. through to 1998–99. I have asked the Higher Education Funding Council for England to continue to exercise tight controls over the number of full-time and sandwich undergraduate students in the next three years, in order to contain forecast spending and to protect quality.

Tuition fees

The maximum tuition fees reimbursed through mandatory awards in 1996–97 will be the same as for 1995–96: £750 for classroom-based courses; £1,600 for laboratory and workshop-based courses; and £2,800 for the clinical elements of medical, dental and veterinary courses. The maximum tuition fee paid through postgraduate awards funded by my Department will be £2,490 in 1996–97.

HEFCE grant

The total provision for the HEFCE for recurrent and capital expenditure is planned at £3,438 million, £3,381 million and £3,336 million in 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 respectively. Within these totals, the settlement confirms the plans for recurrent expenditure announced a year ago. I have asked the funding council to have regard to equipment needs, especially equipment for research, in allocating grant to institutions. I have set as a condition of my grant to the HEFCE, and also to the TTA, that they require institutions in the high education sector to take account of the principles set out in the Chancellor's statement on public sector pay of 18 September 1995. Any failure by institutions to observe these principles may be expected to have an adverse effect on the level of grant made available to the council in 1997–98.

Student support

The plans allow for the level of student support through the main rates for grants and loans to be increased over the next three years in line with inflation. In 1996–97, loan and grant taken together will increase by 2.6 per cent., in line with the forecast change in the retail prices index, exclusive of mortgage interest payments. The main allowances, including dependants' allowances, will also be increased by 2.6 per cent. in 1996–97. Planned expenditure in the financial year 1996–97 is £698 million in loans and £2,009 million on mandatory awards covering maintenance grants and tuition fees. Access funds are being maintained at £28 million a year.

The Government decided in 1993 to accelerate the shift from grant to loan so that by 1996–97 the main rate of grant and loan would be broadly equal. The new rates provide for the main rates of grants to be reduced by about 9 per cent. in 1996–97 with a corresponding increase in the loan rates, so that broad parity will be achieved. The parental contribution scales under the awards regulations will be adjusted so that, for parents whose residual income has risen at the same rate or slower than the rise in national average earnings, the assessed contribution will continue to fall in real terms.

FURTHER AND HIGHER EDUCATION CAPITAL

The Government believe that within the framework of the private finance initiative, colleges in the further education sector and higher education institutions can, and should, be enabled to make much greater use of private finance in funding capital works. Within the total grant to the FEFC, the plans provide for capital grant of £110 million in 1996–97, £92 million in 1997–98 and £59 million in 1998–99. The capital grant to the HEFCE provides for £243 million in 1996–97, £228 million in 1997–98 and £189 million in 1998–99.

OTHER INITIATIVES

On top of the increase in general provision for schools, extra funding is also being provided for a range of programmes designed to widen choice, enhance diversity and promote excellence across all educational sectors:

Nursery provision

The settlement for under-fives in 1996–97 is £37 million—of which £16 million is transferred from education standard spending. Phase 1 of the nursery education voucher scheme will start in a limited number of local authority areas in April 1996. The scheme will be implemented throughout England in April 1997 subject to the passage of necessary legislation.

Grants for educational support and training

The overall level of funding available for grants for educational support and training will increase by 6 per cent. over the 1995–96 equivalent programme. The new total will provide £264 million for schools and local education authorities to spend on a range of important educational priorities—in particular measures for improving school effectiveness. Two new grants will be introduced, providing support for improving literacy and numeracy, and pupil behaviour and discipline. The scheme to raise standards of literacy and numeracy would support the establishment, in close co-operation with Ofsted, of a network of centres which would work with groups of local primary schools to help them improve the teaching and learning of these core skills. Full details of all GEST programmes will be announced shortly.

Assisted places scheme

The plans include provision for a further expansion of the assisted places scheme. The scheme will be doubled in size over time, with the pace of expansion depending on the supply of new places—for which I have invited bids from eligible schools—and on parental demand.

Out-of-school care initiative

The out of school childcare programme will continue to offer parents with school-age children the chance to participate more fully in the labour market. Funding will be available to make grants to childcare projects to cover the initial set up costs, and contribute towards operating costs for up to 12 months while the project becomes firmly established.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress is being made with the arrangements to introduce three-year licences for TECs, and if she will make a statement. [3234]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to be able to announce today that 13 training and enterprise councils have completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set for the award of three-year licences. The licences will be effective from April 1996. The TECs are:

Central England
Co. Durham
Coventry and Warwickshire
Devon and Cornwall
Dorset
Greater Nottingham
Leeds
Norfolk and Waveney
Normid TEC
Rochdale
Teesside
Tyneside
Wolverhampton

A number of other TECs are close to completing the process. I expect to make shortly further announcements of TECs to be awarded licences from April 1996.

This announcement brings the total number of licensed TECs to 42, over half of the TEC network in England. Our expectation has always been that the introduction of licensing for all England TECs would take until 1997.

Youth Training

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance is given to unemployed young people or those in part-time employment seeking to establish a co-operative run enterprise as a means of creating permanent full-time employment in response to market demand. [1789]

Mr Raymond S. Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

In Scotland, Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are responsible for the business start-up scheme, which assists unemployed people to become self-employed. In 1995–96, over £11 million has been allocated to this scheme. Resources are not earmarked specifically for the establishment of co-operative run enterprises, but neither is support precluded. Assistance may also be provided through the main programme, training for work, which helps long-term unemployed people into work. Some local enterprise companies provide financial support, via regional councils, to assist individuals and organisations, particularly in areas of high unemployment, to set up co-operatives.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 29 November 1995

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Quality of Service Survey

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list (a) the cost of the Serjeant at Arms quality of service survey and (b) the payment to Janet Levin Associates for its services in connection with the survey. [2435]

Mr. Beith: The final cost of the survey is dependent on the amount of work which is considered necessary at each stage to complete it satisfactorily. I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to write to the hon. Member with details.

PRIME MINISTER

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what issues concerning Cyprus were discussed by him during his recent meeting with the Prime Minister of Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [3171]

The Prime Minister: I discussed with Mrs. Ciller the prospects for a solution of the Cyprus problem. We agreed that the status quo was not acceptable. I urged Mrs. Ciller to bring positive Turkish influence to bear in moving towards a settlement.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Green Paper on legal aid to the seemingly wealthy was published; when the consultation period ended; and when a decision will be announced. [2001]

Mr. Evans: The Lord Chancellor published his consultation paper on legal aid for the apparently wealthy on 20 December 1994. The consultation period ended on 1 March 1995 and a press release listing the Lord Chancellor's proposals was issued on 26 April 1995. A report by the study group on the establishment of the special investigations unit will go before the Lord Chancellor in the near future. Proposed amendments to the regulations will be placed before Parliament early in 1996.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many justices of the peace there are per 1,000 persons in each of the district council areas in Northern Ireland. [1668]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Justices of the peace are appointed to serve in county court divisions. Details of the number of justices of the peace per 1,000 persons in each division in Northern Ireland are as follows:

Ards: 1.7
Antrim: 1.3
Armagh and South Down: 1.6
Belfast: 2.0
Craigavon: 2.0
Fermanagh and Tyrone: 1.0
Londonderry: 2.0.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list for (a) each court circuit in Wales, (b) for Wales as a whole and (c) for England for each of the last three years for which figures are available: (i) the number of cases submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service by the police for consideration of bringing proceedings, (ii) the number of prosecutions brought by the Crown Prosecution Service and (iii) the figures in (ii) expressed as a percentage of (i); and if he will make a statement. [1090]

The Attorney-General: The tables of figures show the number of cases received from the police and those dealt with by the Crown Prosecution Service during the last three years, for Wales and for England. The figures comprise proceedings in the magistrates courts, but do not include the specialised casework handled by the headquarters of the service. No figures are held for individual court circuits.

The percentage of cases discontinued, expressed as a proportion of those dealt with, was:

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the annual income of the Football Trust for each year since 1990. [2269]

Mr. Sproat: This information is available from the Football Trust annual reports held in the Library of the House.

Swimming and Recreation Centres

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the number of public swimming baths and recreation centres per head of population; what is the equivalent figure for other European Union member states; and if she will make a statement. [1534]

Mr. Sproat: Latest figures for England, based on 1991 population census and the Sports Council's sports facilities database, are for one swimming pool for every 43,429 of the population and one sports centre for every 32,572 of the population. Equivalent figures for Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the respective Secretaries of State. We do not hold comparative data for other European Union member states.

Millenium Exhibition

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what provisions are being made to ensure that charity, Church and other non-commercial organisations will be able to fully participate in the millennium exhibition. [373]

Mrs. Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

TREASURY

Labour Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the unemployment rates by sex, age and ethnic origin for each year from 1989 using the latest labour force survey. [2848]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Comparable information on International Labour Organisation unemployment by sex, age and ethnic origin is available from the labour force survey (LFS), quarterly from spring 1992 onwards. It can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library. Information for the average of the three years 1989–91 is available from the February 1993 issue of the Employment Gazette, which is also available from the Library.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list employment by broad occupation, by ethnic origin and by sex for each year from 1991. [2850]

Mrs. Knight: Comparable information on employment, by occupation, ethnic origin and sex is available from the labour force survey quarterly from spring 1992 onwards. It can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the proportions of (a) men and (b) women by ethnic origin who are working as (i) full-time employees, (ii) part-time employees and (iii) self-employed. [2847] n/a—not available, based on estimate below 10,000.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list employment by industry for each year from 1991 of (a) men and (b) women broken down into (i) whites and (ii) ethnic minorities. [2849]

Mrs. Knight: Comparable information on employment, by industry, ethnic origin and sex is available from the labour force survey, quarterly from spring 1992 onwards. It can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by agency staff (a) the costs of the travel, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned. [2283]

Mrs. Knight: The information for the Chancellor of the Exchequer's four agencies is as follows:

Cost of overseas travel 1994–95	Countries visited	Posts held by travelling staff
Central Statistical Office
£159,661	Countries of the European Community Switzerland, Scandinavia, United States of America, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, China, Hong Kong	Directors (Grades 1a to Grade 4) Heads of Inquiry Divisions, Branches and Sections (Grades 5–7) Heads of Statistical Units (Grades of 5–7) Heads of Service Divisions, Branches and Sections and staff (Grades EO to Grade 5) Statistical staff (SEO to Assistant Statistician)

PAYMASTER There was no overseas travel by staff of the PAYMASTER in the last financial year.

Royal Mint This information could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The Mint is a commercial organisation which carries out more than two-thirds of its business for export. This necessarily entails extensive overseas visits by Mint staff.

Valuation Office Agency

Only one overseas visit as follows:

Cost of overseas travel 1994–95	Countries visited	Posts held by travelling staff
£275	Dublin, Ireland	Grade 5 and 7

Single Currency

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what preparations have been made within the Treasury in anticipation of the single currency; [2772]

(2) what preparations the Bank of England has made in anticipation of the introduction of the single currency. [2771]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Chancellor of the Exchequer is a member of the ECOFIN Council. The Governor of the Bank of England is a member of the European Monetary Institute Council. Treasury and the Bank of England both have representatives on the EU monetary committee. Under the EC treaty, ECOFIN, the EMI and the monetary committee are all involved in preparatory work for a single currency.

The United Kingdom's involvement in preparatory work in no way prejudges the UK's decision whether or not to notify our intention to move to stage 3 of EMU, in accordance with the provisions of protocol 11 annexed to the EC treaty.

Under protocol 11 annexed to the UK treaty, the Prime Minister has ensured that the United Kingdom shall not be obliged or committed to move to the third stage of economic union without a separate decision to do so by the Government and Parliament. We will agree to take part in a single currency only if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time.

Tax

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax was remitted or written off as irrecoverable in 1994; and how much of this was PAYE contributions. [83]

Mr. Jack: The total amount of tax remitted or written off as irrecoverable in the year ended 28 October 1994 was £1.16 billion—about 1.4 per cent. of the total tax collected, and some 26 per cent. lower than the figure for the previous year.

The amount of PAYE contributions remitted or written off in the year ended 28 October 1994 was £270.13 million, some 32 per cent. less than the previous year.

Insolvencies, where the Inland Revenue has very little control over the amount recoverable, account for the vast majority of tax written off or remitted.

EU Contributions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the gross contributions, receipts and net contributions or receipts, (b) the population and approximate number of households and (c) the net contributions or receipts per head and per household of each state which was a member of the EU before the treaty of Corfu for (a) 1990 and (b) 1994, in (i) ecus and (ii) £ sterling. [2513]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is set out in the table. This covers the former European Union of 12 member states. Following the conclusions of the European Council in Corfu in June 1994, Sweden, Austria and Finland proceeded to join the Union at the beginning of this year.

Agriculture Contributions (EU)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps have been taken in respect of the conclusions contained in paragraph 1.125, page 44, of the annual report of the Court of Auditors of the European Communities, in respect of the United Kingdom's provision of information and methods of estimating the agriculture component of gross national product. [2800]

Mrs. Angela Knight: In July 1994 the GNP committee discussed a paper by the Commission covering the agriculture component of GNP for all member states. There was a routine request for several member states, including the United Kingdom to supply the Commission with additional information on sources and methods.

Immediately following the meeting, the Central Statistical Office sent the Commission a copy of an inventory on the sources and methods for agriculture, prepared by the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food. The Central Statistical Office will continue to respond to any reasonable request for information from the Commission and the GNP committee.

Fuel Duty

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the effect on market share and exhaust pollution in Sweden of fuel tax related to the sulphur contents of motor vehicle diesel. [3078]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the rates of motor vehicle fuel duty for different types of petrol and for diesel. [3077]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The excise duty rates for petrol and diesel road fuel are as follows:

Leaded petrol: 39.12p per litre

Unleaded petrol: 34.30p per litre

Diesel road fuel: 34.30p per litre.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the differential in fuel duty needed to achieve common retail prices for ordinary diesel and for low sulphur diesel for motor vehicles. [3075]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I regret that, because of the wide variation in the pre-tax price of diesel, no meaningful estimate can be made.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the medium-term change in shares of motor vehicle diesel between ordinary and low sulphur diesel if retail prices were the same. [3076]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government have no information on which to base such an estimate.

Inflation

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of overall inflation in 1995–96. [1932]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97" contains my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's latest forecast for inflation for the years 1995 and 1996.

World Bank Inspection Panel

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to support the continuation of the World bank inspection panel. [2910]

Mr. Hanley: I have been asked to reply.

Yes. We hope the panel will prove a useful addition to the existing systems of control provided through the board of directors and by management and will enhance measures to increase the openness of the bank's operations.

SCOTLAND

Registered Land

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage and acreage of land in Scotland is unregistered. [2393]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Title to all land in Scotland is registered in the Land Register for Scotland or recorded in the Register of Sasines.

Electoral Wards

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the new council wards which now contain (a) the 3,865 electors from Strathclyde electoral division 46 (Chryston) included in the East Dumbartonshire council, (b) the 8,099 electors from Strathclyde electoral division 35 (Toryglen/Kingspark) included in the area of South Lanarkshire council, (c) the 320 electors from Strathclyde electoral division 8 (Vale of Leven) included in the area of Argyll and Bute council and (d) the 248 electors from Tayside electoral division 31 (Sidlaw) included in the area of Dundee city council; and, where any of these groups of electors is contained in more than one new council ward, if he will indicate how many of the electors in question are contained in each of those wards. [2105]

Mr. Kynoch: The information is as follows:

(a) East Dumbartonshire electoral ward 26: South Lenzie/Waterside.

(b) South Lanarkshire:

Electoral ward 62: Rutherglen West (3,507 electors)

Electoral ward 64: Bankhead (3,095 electors)

Electoral ward 65: Spittal/Blairbeth (1,497 electors)

(c) Argyll and Bute electoral ward 31: Rhu/Garelochhead/Luss

(d) City of Dundee:

Electoral ward 13: Menzieshill West (76 electors)

Electoral ward 16: Pitalpin (19 electors)

Electoral ward 17: Ardler (2 electors)

Electoral ward 19: St Mary's West (17 electors)

Electoral ward 20: Downfield (6 electors)

Electoral ward 27: Fintry North (14 electors)

Electoral ward 29: Whitfield North (0 electors)

Electoral ward 35: Balgillo (38 electors)

Electoral ward 36: Dalhousie (76 electors).

Arts

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase funding for the arts in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [2087]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will make an announcement on his future spending plans shortly.

Fire Brigades

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory obligation the fire brigade has to attend flooding, road accidents and other non-fire related incidents. [2680]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A fire authority is empowered, under section 3(1)(e) of the Fire Services Act 1947, to employ the fire brigade maintained by it, or to use any equipment so maintained, for purposes other than firefighting purposes. There is no statutory obligation on such an authority to do so.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is given to the activities of the fire brigade that are not related to firefighting or prevention in determining its funding. [2681]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The principal determinants of fire service funding are the personnel, fire stations, and equipment required to provide fire cover. Activities not related to firefighting are undertaken largely with those resources, but any additional requirements in relation to these activities are also taken into account by my right hon. Friend.

Water and Sewerage Authorities

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state his proposals for the financing of the new Scottish water and sewerage authorities in 1996–97. [3686]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Water authorities are currently preparing charges schemes for submission to the Customers Council. The financial arrangements that I am announcing today mean that average charges in 1996–97 need increase by no more than 6 per cent. I invite the authorities to be guided accordingly in finalising their charges schemes. It is for each authority to decide upon its own scheme and on the allocation of charges, and of any overall increase in charges among different groups of customers. It is then for the authorities and the Customers Council to consider all aspects of the charges scheme. I become involved only if there remain differences which cannot be resolved.

Section 83(2) of the Local Government etc (Scotland) Act 1994 empowers me to set a rate of return which the authorities should earn on the value of their net assets. I propose that for each authority this rate of return should be 6.5 per cent. to be earned annually on net assets amounting initially to £336 million in the case of the east authority, £260 million in the case of the north authority, and £404 million in the case of west authority. The necessary order will be laid before Parliament shortly.

I have also decided that the external financing limits for 1996–97 for the authorities will amount to £274 million. The allocation to each authority will be announced shortly.

We have already undertaken to provide relief to offset the charge for domestic sewerage which from 1 April next year will be levied direct on customers instead of being a service met from the council tax. I can now announce that we will give the authorities income of £89.7 million to compensate for the charge income they will forgo in 1996–97. Of this, £27.3 million will be available to the east authority, £22.4 million to the north authority and £40 million to the west authority. The necessary order will be laid before Parliament shortly.

I believe that these arrangements which I have announced will establish the new water and sewerage authorities on a sound financial footing and will enable them from the outset to deliver a first class service at the lowest possible cost.

Highland Health Board

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the proportionate value of the computer equipment transferred from Highland health board to the Computing Sciences Corporation Ltd. as part of the privatisation process earlier this year; and if he will make a statement. [308]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proportionate value as at March 1995 of the equipment transferred from Highland health board to the Computing Sciences Corporation Ltd. was 5.5 per cent. of the total market value of the equipment transferred by the NHS in Scotland. This was based on an independent market evaluation.

Public Bodies

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of individuals who have been appointed to non-departmental public bodies serving and working within Lanarkshire indicating their political party affiliations, if known. [2953]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 November 1995]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Non-departmental public bodies in Scotland are listed in the annual Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies", which includes the addresses of all executive non-departmental public bodies. The hon. Member may wish to approach these bodies direct for the information he seeks. As a general rule, political affiliation is not a criterion for appointment to public bodies and, except where this information is volunteered by the appointee, it is not made a matter for record.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total expenditure on non-departmental public bodies in Scotland. [2954]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 November 1995]: In 1993–94, my Department spent £1,567 million on executive and advisory bodies and tribunals. This is the most recent year for which figures are available. It includes total Government funding to these bodies of £1,562 million and direct expenditure by my Department of £5 million. Details of expenditure by non-departmental public bodies is published annually by Cabinet Office in "Public Bodies".

Orchard House Nursing Home

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will request that BBC Frontline Scotland programme to supply him with its videoed evidence of its investigation into Orchard House nursing home. [2957]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1995]: My right hon. Friend understands that, as part of Lanarkshire health board's inquiry into the standards of care at Orchard House nursing home, the investigating officer was allowed by the British Broadcasting Corporation to view its videoed evidence of the Frontline Scotland investigation into Orchard House nursing home. The board's inquiry is now complete and the necessary follow-up action is underway.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to review legislation to give more powers to local authorities and health boards to enable them to introduce stricter controls on registration of nursing homes and residential homes; and if he will make a statement. [2958]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1995]: A Scottish Office working group, which includes representatives of local authorities, care home owners' associations and users, is currently considering residential home registration and inspection issues, including the current legislative arrangements. National standards for the registration and inspection of nursing homes will be the outcome of a project funded by the health board general managers' group.

We shall consider all recommendations from these groups, which would help ensure the continued protection of the potentially vulnerable people cared for in these homes.

Nursing Homes, Lanarkshire

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many residents have died in Lanarkshire nursing homes in the Lanarkshire health board area in each year since 1979. [2959]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1995]: This information was not held centrally before October 1992. The information requested since then is as follows:

Year	Deaths
1 October to 31 December 1992	93
1993	538
1994	589
1 January to 30 September 1995	479

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what discussions his Department has had with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise in relation to the levels of beneficial interest declared by local enterprise company directors in local enterprise company contracts; [1191]

(2) what information the directors of local enterprise companies are required to declare in relation to their interests in other enterprise companies; [1320]

(3) if he will instruct the chief executives of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to carry out a study of the beneficial interests of local enterprise directors in other local enterprise companies for the purpose of ensuring that this information is publicly accountable; [1192]

(4) what studies his Department has carried out into the involvement of local enterprise company directors in the contracts awarded by local enterprise companies; [1190]

(5) what procedures are currently in place to ensure that the beneficial interests of the director of a local enterprise company in the contracts awarded by a different local enterprise company are open to public scrutiny; [1194]

(6) for what regions information is not currently delivered by directors of local enterprise companies in respect of their interest in other enterprise companies. [2148]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 24 November 1995]: The local enterprise company operating contracts approved by the Scottish Office require local enterprise companies to have in place registers of directors' interests that are open to public inspection, procedures for avoiding conflicts of interest, and arrangements for publishing details in their annual reports of contracts in which directors have an interest.

The detailed procedures within this overall framework are an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, which the Department has discussed with them from time to time. Both the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise networks have adopted procedures which ensure that the private interests of local enterprise company directors are declared and registered, and that directors do not take part in board decisions on matters in which they have an interest. Local enterprise company directors serve on the board of only one local enterprise company, in whose area they must live or work. They play no role in the decisions of any other local enterprise company board, so there is no conflict of interest if another board should take a decision affecting their private beneficial interests.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Japanese Companies

Dr. Bray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those Japanese firms which currently have research and development teams operating in the United Kingdom. [3162]

Mr. Eggar: As of 3 October 1995, my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau was aware of 100 Japanese companies engaged in some form of research, development and/or design—RD and D—in the United Kingdom. A full list of these companies with details of their RD and D activities and their locations within the United Kingdom is being placed in the Library of the House.

COPEX Exhibition

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the representatives of Government Departments who visited the COPEX exhibition at Sandown racecourse in November. [1641]

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not held by my Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Telephone Disconnections

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of telephone disconnections in each year of the five years prior to privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [3098]

Mr. Ian Taylor: This is a matter for BT. The statistics requested are not currently maintained within the Department, or by Oftel.

Offshore Installations

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects to receive the abandonment programme for the North West Hutton platform; and if he will make a statement; [2045]

(2) if he will list the abandonment programmes for off-shore installations, deposited with his Department in each of the past five years; how many were (a) accepted; (b) rejected and (c) returned to the companies concerned for modification; and if he will make a statement. [2046]

Mr. Eggar: Amoco (UK) Exploration Company, the operator of the North West Hutton installation, has been conducting studies since 1992 in connection with the future decommissioning of this installation. The decommissioning date for this installation will depend on a number of factors. I am not yet in a position to say when I will be calling on the owners to submit a programme.

We have approved the following abandonment programmes for offshore installations in each of the past five years:

Year	Facility
1991	Crawford
1992	Argyll, Duncan and Innes Blair
1993	Angus Forbes
1994	Fulmar Single Anchor Leg Mooring (SALM) buoy Brent Spar oil storage and tanker loading facility
1995	Esmond (2 installations) and Gordon

Each of these programmes was approved after a series of discussions with my Department and consultation with interested parties. No abandonment programme has been rejected or modified under section 4 of the Petroleum Act 1987.

Nigerian Trade Fairs

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the agreed priority sectors from the United Kingdom for Nigerian regional trade fairs in February and March 1996; and who are (a) the bankers and (b) the sponsors of the event. [3109]

Mr. Oppenheim: The British high commission is proposing to take a stand at two regional trade fairs in Nigeria in February and March 1996. My Department and the high commission have invited UK companies to exhibit their brochures on the stands. This invitation has been targeted at companies involved in oil and gas, agriculture—agricultural equipment, water and water treatment, food processing, power generation/distribution, medical equipment and pharmaceuticals. There is no UK sponsorship of either trade fair.

Channel 5

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons the range of the proposed transmissions of Channel 5 within Northern Ireland has been restricted. [3168]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The coverage plan for Channel 5 is the responsibility of the Independent Television Commission. Limitations on the range of the transmissions are required to avoid causing interference to other television services, and other radiocommunication services, in Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Greenbury Report

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his proposals for implementing such recommendations of the Greenbury report as require action or assistance from Her Majesty's Government. [3080]

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) on 7 November 1995, Official Report, columns 702-4.

Employment Agency Licensing Division

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the annual income of the employment agency licensing division arising from (a) fees, (b) charges and (c) fines; what was the total number of staff employed (i) part time and (ii) full time; and what contribution his Department has made towards the annual running costs in each of the past three years. [2751]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 November 1995]: The licensing requirements of the Employment Agencies Act 1973 were abolished on 3 January 1995. Fees for licenses issued under the Act and fines imposed by magistrates courts for offences against the Act were paid to the Consolidated Fund. They could therefore not be set against departmental expenditure.

	Fees paid £million	Fines imposed £thousands
1992–93	1.7	1.9
1993–94	1.7	3.2
1994–95	[1]1.4	1.1

[1] To 3 January 1995 only.

Staff employed on administering the 1973 Act in 1992–93 and 1993–94 were 50.5 and 51.5 respectively. During 1994–95 the number fell to 35. The number of part-time staff did not exceed five at any time in the three years.

Power Cables

Ms Lynne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to introducing a statutory requirement on electricity companies to pay compensation to householders living beneath power cables where it can be proved that householders have faced (a) a decline in the value of their property and (b) a deterioration in their health. [1962]

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The Government have no plans to introduce such a requirement.

With regard to item (a), I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 27 November 1995, Official Report, column 422.

With regard to item (b), the National Radiological Protection Board advises the Government on scientific matters relating electromagnetic fields to alleged effects on human health. To date, there is insufficient scientific evidence to establish a link between electromagnetic fields and cancer or leukaemia, the diseases of most concern, or to any other serious illness.

Foreign Assets

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department has seized or frozen personal accounts and assets of members of foreign Governments; what was seized or frozen; and if he will make a statement. [2918]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer given to his previous question on 27 November, Official Report, column 429.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Student Loans

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the support that will be available to students through mandatory awards and student loans in the academic year 1996–97. [3499]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 28 November that the total level of support available to students through the main rates of grant and loan together in 1996–97 will be 2.6 per cent. higher than for 1995–96, in line with forecast price increases. I am placing a memorandum in the Library giving full details of the new grant and fee rates for 1996–97. These rates will be incorporated in the Education (Student Loans) Regulations to be laid before Parliament in due course.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what detailed arrangements she proposes for expanding the assisted places scheme. [3500]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 13 October that the assisted places scheme is to be doubled in size. I am today announcing the plans for implementation in England. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland will make statements about the arrangements for their schemes.

The pace of this expansion over time will depend on the supply of eligible high-quality places and on parental demand. This Department is inviting bids from independent schools—whether they are already participating in the scheme or not—for the first instalment of new places in September 1996. We look forward to receiving bids for:

(a) new day places mainly for entry at age 11, but also at age 13 and for the sixth form, in mainstream independent secondary schools;

(b) some new day places for children below age 11 in integral junior departments of independent secondary schools;

(c) some new aided places in specialist schools of music or ballet for talented pupils.

To be eligible, schools must provide a broad-balanced curriculum, have an excellent record of GCSE and A-level performance and maintain a strong sixth form. I will also be seeking an equitable distribution between boys and girls, and will especially welcome bids from schools serving inner-city areas.

The scheme will continue to be aimed at able children from low-income families who would not otherwise have had the opportunity of the education offered in these schools. Schools will continue to select pupils according to their own academic entry criteria and the general eligibility conditions prescribed in the regulations. I will encourage them to give priority to those with potential to benefit from the distinctive facilities the school offers, including where appropriate pupils from inner-city areas and the ethnic minority communities.

I intend to continue the present broad framework of means-tested parental contributions towards approved fees. The arrangements for means testing and fee setting are reviewed annually for the purpose of the regulations, and I will consider any representations on these matters for the reviews in 1996 and subsequent years.

I aim to announce the successful bidders for the first instalment of new places early in 1996, and to ensure that parents are fully aware of the new opportunities open to them. I am confident that they will widely welcome the expansion of choice, diversity and excellence which this initiative offers.

Doncaster and Mexborough Jobcentre

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reason the reply in respect of jobcentres in Doncaster and Mexborough, from her chief executive of the Employment Service referred to in her answer of 23 October, was not published in the Official Report as well; and if she will make a statement. [1103]

Mr. Forth: I regret the fact that, due to an administrative error in the Department, the reply was not published in the Official Report. A copy of the chief executive's reply to the hon. Member has now been placed in the Library.

Expenditure, Calderdale

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of Calderdale's (a) total and (b) secondary education sector is grant maintained; and what proportion of total public expenditure on education in Calderdale is in the grant-maintained sector. [1467]

Mr. Robin Squire: According to the local education authority's expenditure return for 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available, the proportion of local authority net recurrent expenditure, which was allocated as recurrent funding to grant-maintained schools in Calderdale was 11 per cent. NRE is gross expenditure on schools, continuing education and management and support services related to education, minus income other than that in the form of specific grants and excluding capital. The percentage figures also includes special purpose grants paid to grant-maintained schools by the Funding Agency for Schools.

The proportion of pupils in grant-maintained schools as at January 1994 in Calderdale was (a) 15 per cent. of the total and (b) 35 per cent. of the secondary sector. At January 1995 the proportions were (a) 26 per cent. and (b) 56 per cent.

Written Answers

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State For Education and Employment how many written questions her Department has failed to answer since it was established; and if she will give an explanation for each such failure, listing the question and any answer now available. [2248]

Mr. Robin Squire: The matter is currently being investigated and I will write to the hon. Member when this is complete.

Youth Training

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many YT trainees (a) have gained full employment (b) have gone on to further training and (c) became unemployed at the end of their training in each year since the scheme began. [2315]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is given in the table:

Percentage of leavers gaining each outcome
Youth Training (including Youth Credits)

England and Wales

YT National Follow-up Survey.
The YT National Follow-up Survey records 8 separate labour market outcomes plus "not stated". These are; full-time job with same employer, full-time job with different employer, self-employment, part-time job, unemployed, another government training programme, full-time education and something else as stipulated by the trainee.

Sheffield TEC

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what negotiations have taken place between her Department and Sheffield TEC to make provision for employment for the over-45 year age group; and if she will make a statement; [2520]

(2) what initiatives her Department is undertaking to make provision for the employment for the over-45 age group in the Sheffield travel-to-work area; and if she will make a statement. [2517]

Mr. Paice: The Department continues to provide a wide range of employment and training measures in the Sheffield area to help unemployed people find a job and employed people to enhance their skill and knowledge levels. It also has a campaign for older workers targeted at employers who impose age restrictions to persuade them of the need to recruit, retain and retrain individuals on the basis of ability and not age.

In addition, the Department has contracted with Sheffield TEC to provide during this financial year training, education and enterprise courses amounting to 4,350 adult places; many of which will be filled by those in the over-45 group.

It is these measures and programmes as part of the Government's policy of maintaining the economic conditions of low inflation and a fully competitive and flexible labour market which continues to maintain existing jobs and creates new employment opportunities for all large groups including the over-45s.

Over the last two years, in the Sheffield travel-to-work area, unemployment in the 45-and-over age group has fallen by almost 17 per cent., and long-term unemployment in the same group by almost 11 per cent.

Child Care Expenses

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will introduce guidelines governing the payment of child care expenses by governing bodies to school governors attending meetings. [2737]

Mr. Robin Squire: No. Being a school governor is a voluntary, unpaid activity. The Government applaud the 300,000 volunteers who give their time and energy to this important work. Governors may receive reimbursement for travel and subsistence costs, but the law does not currently allow payments beyond that, nor does the current pattern of governor recruitment suggest a need to change these arrangements.

National Vocational Qualifications

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average cost of obtaining an NVQ; and how many of these have been obtained in Sheffield. [2519]

Mr. Paice: Research carried out by KPMG Management Consultants in 1994 found that, among the 60 firms studied, the median cost to an employer for one member of staff obtaining a national vocational qualification was £200 on direct outlays, such as NVQ registration and certification fees. In addition, staff time was spent on training, assessment and other activities related to achieving an NVQ, and for the typical employer in that survey this amounted to around £3,000.

More than 2 million NVQs have been awarded since their launch. Information on the numbers awarded on the Sheffield area is not available

Oxford University (Admissions)

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of pupils from state schools gained admission to Oxford university in (a) 1969, (b) 1979 and (c) 1994. [2892]

Mr. Forth: Detailed information on admissions to individual universities is not collected centrally. It is for each university to decide its own criteria for the admission of students. I understand that the admissions office of Oxford university produces annual statistics along these lines and my hon. Friend might care to speak to it directly.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the date of (a) the close of the ballot, (b) publication of proposals and (c) the Secretary of State's decision in respect of each school which has become grant-maintained since 31 August 1994; and whether the ballot was initiated by the governors' resolution or parents' petition. [2893]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the table:

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the grant-maintained schools which have applied for loans under section 92 of the Education Act 1993, in each case stating (a) the size of loan requested, (b) the purpose for which the loan was agree, (c) the size of the loan agreed, (d) the period of repayment and (e) the interest rate applied. [2895]

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the grant-maintained schools which have applied for special purpose grant (restructuring), in each case stating (a) the number of (i) teaching and (ii) non-teaching posts affected, (b) the posts for which grant was awarded and (c) if (i) premature retirement compensation or (ii) statutory redundancy payment was awarded. [2897]

Mr. Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Pupil Achievements

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary school children perform two or more years below their chronological age in (i) English and (ii) maths. [2992]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected by the Department. The table shows for 1994 the proportion of pupils in England at the end of key stages 1 and 3 reaching the expected national curriculum level of their age group. Figures for 1995, which for the first time will show the results of pupils at the end of key stages 1, 2 and 3, should be available in the new year, and will be placed in the Library.

Percentage of pupils at the end of key stage 1 reaching or exceeding level 2

	Teacher assessment	Test
Reading	80	80
Writing	70	67
Spelling	73	71
Handwriting	81	80
Mathematics	81	81

Based on a response rate from schools of about 52 per cent.

Percentage of pupils at the end of key stage 3 reaching or exceeding level 5

	Teacher assessment	Test
English	63	58
Mathematics	65	60

Based on a response rate from schools of about 22 per cent.

Departmental Targets

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the published recommended response times within which her Department is expected to reply to letters from the public. [2998]

Mr. Paice: The Department aims to respond to all letters from members of the public within 20 working days, which is the target set in the code of practice on access to Government information.

Opting-out

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) schools, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools there are in England and Wales and in each county; how many schools have (i) held ballots to decide whether or not to opt out of local authority control and (ii) decided to opt out of local education authority control; and what are (i) and (ii) as a percentage of (a), (b) and (c) for each county and for England and Wales. [640]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information in respect of maintained schools in all local education authorities in England is set out in the table. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

[1] Figures for total numbers of maintained schools in England include special schools.
[2] Figures for numbers of maintained schools, primary, secondary and total, are derived from the January 1995 DfEE Annual Schools' Census, and exclude those schools which have closed subsequent to holding a ballot on GM status. Figures for the proportion of schools that have held GM ballots need to be viewed accordingly.

Education Vouchers

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what sums of money (a) have been and (b) will be paid to Capita Managed Services Ltd. for issuing and redeeming nursery education vouchers for phase 1 of the voucher scheme. [3373]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government's contract with Capita Managed Services Ltd. to administer phase 1 of the nursery voucher scheme was awarded after a competitive tender. The financial details are commercially confidential.

HEALTH

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) district nurses and (b) health visitors were in training for each of the years between 1988 and 1995 inclusive broken down by real frequency and whole-time equivalents. [1270]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. I refer the hon. Member to the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses (a) entered and (b) left the profession in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [3140]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Clinical Depression

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the incidence of clinical depression in the United Kingdom. [2223]

Mr. Bowis: The report of the first national survey of psychiatric morbidity in Great Britain, commissioned by my Department, was published in May 1995. This described the prevalence of psychiatric disorders among adults aged 16 to 64 living in private households and showed that in this population 77 per 1,000 adults were suffering from mixed anxiety and depressive disorder and 21 per 1,000 adults from a depressive episode.

Family Health Service Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct family health service authorities to include in the public papers of their meetings details of all cases where they have withheld remuneration from general practitioner practices to the value of £500 or more. [2240]

Mr. Malone: No. Decisions to withhold remuneration from a general practitioner are taken by family health services authorities under the National Health Service (Service Committee and Tribunal) Regulations 1992, as amended. Regulation 9(9) provides for the FHSA's decision to be communicated only to the parties to the proceedings, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and where reasonably requested to do so by either party, to any Member of either House of Parliament.

Prozac

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the prescription by psychiatrists of Prozac to children. [2229]

Mr. Bowis: The use of Prozac for children is not recommended under the terms of the product licence but the application of this advice is a matter for individual clinical judgment.

Adoption and Fostering

Mr. John Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) adoptions there have been in the United Kingdom and (b) children have been put out to foster in each of the last 10 years; and what has been the total cost to public funds of fostering in the last year. [2133]

Mr. Bowis: Numbers of adoptions in England and Wales are published in "Marriage and Divorce Statistics: England and Wales 19XX. OPCS series FM2", copies of which are available in the Library. Information about adoptions in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Numbers of children placed with local authority foster parents in England in the 10 years to 31 March 1993 are contained in historical tables in "Children Looked After by Local Authorities, 14 October 1991 to 31 March 1993. A/F 93/12", copies of which are available in the Library. The provisional figure for 31 March 1994 was 32,000.

Net expenditure by local authorities on children boarded out in 1993–94, the latest year for which the information is available, was £244 million.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the unauthorised ex gratia payment to the former director of regionally managed services of the West Midlands regional health authority has been recovered. [2473]

Mr. Malone: The prospects for recovering this payment are presently being reviewed, taking account of recent legal advice.

Dental Amalgam

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evaluation his Department has carried out in the past two years of the level of toxicity of mercury fillings in current use in dentistry; and if he will make a statement; [2488]

(2) what assessment he has made of the cost to the NHS of a ban on the use of mercury-based amalgams in dentistry and the use of alternative non-mercury based amalgams; and if he will make a statement; [2522]

(3) what recent research has been undertaken or commissioned by his Department into the exposure of patients to mercury following the use of dental silver amalgam; and if he will make a statement; [2489]

(4) what representations he has received in respect of the ban imposed by the German Ministry of Health on the use of mercury amalgam in dentistry; and if he will make a statement; [2654]

(5) what assessment his Department has made of the ban by the Austrian Government of the use of mercury amalgams in dental fillings for children from 1996; and if he will make a statement; [2521]

(6) what research his Department has undertaken into mercury hypersensitivity from dental amalgam in patients giving rise to oral lichen planus lesions; and if he will make a statement; [2529]

(7) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the level of mercury concentration in the hippocampus, the amygdala and the nucleus basalis of people who have died of Alzheimer's disease; and if he will make a statement; [2523]

(8) if he will evaluate the research material upon which the Swedish Government have now introduced a gradual phasing out of the use of mercury amalgam for dental fillings; and if he will make a statement. [2671]

Mr. Malone: The Committee on Toxicity advised in 1986 that the use of dental amalgam is free from the risk of systemic toxicity and that only a few cases of hypersensitivity occur. The subsequent research findings and recent evaluations by other authoritative national and international expert committees are consistent with that advice. The Department continues to monitor and evaluate research in this area.

There are neither reasons to ban dental amalgam nor to carry out a cost assessment of the use of amalgam or alternative materials.

In 1994, the South and West regional health authority commissioned research by Bristol dental school into whether amalgam-related treatment should be avoided during pregnancy.

A European working group, which includes United Kingdom representatives, is currently reviewing dental amalgam in the context of the requirements of the European medical devices directive.

The Department is aware that the European Commission has received notification from German authorities of an intention to restrict the use of amalgam for certain patients. However, the Department has not received any formal notification of any German or Austrian ban on the use of amalgam.

There are only a few documented cases of hypersensitivity to dental amalgam in literature and there has been no evidence to suggest an increase. The Committee on Toxicity advised that there was no need for further research.

The Department has commissioned no research into the preponderance of mercury concentration on the brains of people who have died of Alzheimer's disease. An information sheet, prepared for the Alzheimer's Disease Society by Professor Jim Edwardson director of the MRC Neurochemical Pathology unit, concludes that there is very little evidence to link this metal with Alzheimer's disease.

The Department has received and considered the 1994 report from Sweden which states that the expert group found no evidence that there is a connection between dental amalgam and general or specific ill health except in rare cases of hypersensitivity.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the causes of high concentrations of mercury in the brain cells of deceased victims of Alzheimer's disease; if he will list the conclusions of his Department in respect of the causes; and if he will make a statement. [2524]

Mr. Bowis: The Department has not commissioned any such research.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Alzheimer's disease were reported in the United Kingdom (a) 1970, (b) 1975, (c) 1980, (d) 1985, (e) 1990 and (f) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [2525]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. It is estimated that there are currently around 600,00 sufferers from dementia in England and Wales.

Royal London Hospital

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds a payment of £140,000 was made to a former finance director at the Royal London hospital. [3114]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for the Royal Hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Derek Boorman, chairman of the trust, for details.

NHS Pension

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the time scale for decision-taking in respect of the matter referred to in his answer 7 November, Official Report, column 678. [3086]

Mr. Malone: When all relevant factors have been taken into account.

Health Visitors

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how much time health visitors spend each week administering purchasers' contracts. [3122]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. National health service trusts and health authorities are expected locally to ensure that health visitors activity is both clinically and cost effective.

Management Costs

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the league table of management costs in NHS trusts and health authorities. [3380]

Mr. Malone: We will be publishing information shortly.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the number of cases reported alleging clinical negligence, (b) the total amount of money claimed in these cases, (c) the total amount of money advised by solicitors of the trusts or otherwise resolved by them in settlement of such claims and (d) the figures for (c) expressed as a percentage of turnover, for each health trust and for England as a whole for each of the last two years for which information is available. [642]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

GP Fundholding

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of general practitioners are now fundholders. [2551]

Mr. Malone: As at April 1995, just over 39 per cent. of general practitioners are fundholders serving 41 per cent. of the population.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners have moved to fundholding status in each year since the inception of the scheme. [2552]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is shown in the table.

	Number of fundholding general practitioners
1991–92	1,715
1992–93	1,444
1993–94	2,944
1994–95	2,657
1995–96	1,650

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the percentage of general practitioners expected on present trends to move to fundholding status (a) in 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [2553]

Mr. Malone: From April 1995, over 39 per cent. of general practitioners in England are in the fundholding scheme. This is expected to increase to over 50 per cent. by April 1996 with more preparing to join in 1997.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total administrative costs of running general practitioner fundholding schemes in each year since the inception of the scheme. [2554]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 17 January, Official Report, columns 425–26. For 1994–95, expenditure on management allowances was £66 million.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he had with the medical profession to improve the workings of general practitioner fundholding schemes. [2555]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has regular meetings with the medical profession to discuss a range of issues including general practitioner fundholding.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the reorganisation of community health councils in the Plymouth and Torbay area; and if he will make a statement. [2700]

Mr. Malone: None. The re-organisation of community health councils is a matter for regional health authorities, in their capacity as the establishing body for community health councils. They have a responsibility to ensure that CHCs are able to reflect the views of the communities they serve, for example when the establishing body are considering CHC mergers or boundary changes the first consideration must always be whether maintaining the existing CHCs will best serve the local interest.

With specific reference to the Plymouth and Torbay area, the hon. Member may wish to contact Ms Rennie Fritchie, chairman of the RHA for details.

ENVIRONMENT

Carbon Monoxide Poisoning

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information, advice and facilities will be made available to (a) the relatives of victims and (b) victims of carbon monoxide poisoning, and by whom, after the introduction of competition in the domestic gas supply market. [2004]

Sir Paul Beresford: All carbon monoxide, CO, fatalities that are notified to the Health and Safety Executive will continue to be investigated. The question of whether the industry will have a duty to conduct separate investigations into CO deaths has yet to be agreed by the Health and Safety Commission. HSE inspectors will continue to follow the general HSE policy of keeping interested parties, including those affected by CO poisoning and the families of victims, informed of progress with the investigations; informing them of any legal proceedings to be taken; liaising closely with the police and coroners courts in the case of fatal accidents; and liaising with the crown Prosecution Service if manslaughter charges should be considered. HSE inspectors also issued the leaflet "Advice to Bereaved Families" in respect of all work-related fatalities.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures the public gas transporters and emergency service providers will adopt to deal with carbon monoxide poisoning after the introduction of competition in the domestic gas supply market. [2006]

Sir Paul Beresford: Regulation 6(1) of the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangers Occurrences Regulations 1985 require suppliers of flammable gas to notify the Health Safety Executive forthwith of any incident notified to them, which has led to a death or other specified condition arising from exposure to carbon monoxide, CO from the incomplete combustion of gas. The supplier is also required to make a report in writing within 14 days.

It is proposed that a revision to RIDDOR, which is expected to come into force on 1 April 1996, will transfer the duty to notify and report to HSE from suppliers to gas conveyors.

The Health and Safety Commission issued a consultative document on draft Gas Safety (Management) Regulations in July 1995. One of the proposals was that when a gas conveyor is notified of a suspected or actual release of CO, it should attend the premises to make the situation safe.

The HSC will shortly be considering the results of the consultation exercise, including the arrangements for dealing with CO poisoning incidents. It is intended that the new regulations will come into force on 1 April 1996.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will have responsibility for investigating cases of carbon monoxide poisoning after the introduction of competition in the domestic gas market. [2007]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Commission issued a consultative document in July 1995 on the draft Gas Safety (Management) Regulations. One of the proposals on which the commission specifically sought views was that a duty should be placed on gas suppliers to investigate carbon monoxide poisoning incidents.

The HSC will shortly be considering the results of the consultation exercise, including the arrangements for dealing with CO poisoning incidents. It is intended that the new regulations will come into force on 1 April 1996.

Mining Accident Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the private coal mining companies which publish accident figures on a six-monthly basis; what considerations apply in determining which companies provide such statistics on this basis; and what plans Her Majesty's inspectorate has to publish figures on this basis for the whole of the United Kingdom coal industry. [2053]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive is not aware of the private coal companies which publish accident figures on a six-monthly basis. The decision whether to publish company accident statistics is a matter for the individual company concerned. The HSE mines inspectorate publishes accident statistics for the whole of the mining industry on an annual basis and has no plans to publish any on a company basis.

Stonehenge

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussion his Department had with (a) English Heritage and (b) the Wiltshire county archaeologist about the proposal to build three houses inside the enclosure known as Vespasian's Camp in the Stonehenge world heritage site before planning permission was granted; what assessment he has made of the conformity of the permission with PPG15; what requests he has received to revoke it; and if he will make a statement. [2367]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government office for the south-west received representations from English Heritage and the Wiltshire county archaeologist, as well as Salisbury district council and Chapman Warren, agents for the applicants. The planning permission was issued by Salisbury district council on 2 December 1994, including a condition which provides for archaeological investigation prior to development. On the same day, Wiltshire county council wrote to request call-in by the Secretary of State.

The land involved is not an scheduled ancient monument and in those circumstances the district council felt unable to refuse planning consent, which was consistent with the unchallenged housing provisions of the draft local plan, unless English Heritage gave an undertaking to meet the costs of any award against the council at appeal. No such undertaking was given and English Heritage did not press the Secretary of State to call in the application.

I have received no requests to revoke the planning permission.

EAGA Services Ltd.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the relationship between the energy action grants agency and EAGA Services Ltd. and on the role referred by EAGA Services Ltd. [2136]

Mr. Clappison: The energy action grants agency was recently renamed EAGA Ltd. EAGA Ltd. and EAGA Services Ltd. are sister companies within the EAGA group of companies. EAGA Ltd. works within the public sector, and its major contract is with the Department of the Environment to administer the home energy efficiency scheme. EAGA Services Ltd. tenders for work outside the public sector.

Rail Deregulation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Minister has ultimate responsibility for the deregulation of rural business. [2640]

Sir Paul Beresford: I report to the Secretary of State for the Environment on the deregulation of the burdens on business which fall within this Department's areas of responsibility.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanisms exist to co-ordinate the rail transport policy with the Department of Transport. [2642]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department is in regular contact with the Department of Transport on all policy issues affecting the environment.

Development Corporations

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the development corporations in the United Kingdom that were originally formed; how many are still in existence; what are their respective time limits; how much land each has reclaimed; how many jobs have been created by each corporation's activities; what value of private sector funding has been attracted by each; and if he will make a statement. [2518]

Mr. Curry: The information is given in the table:

UDC	Wind-up date	Land reclaimed (hectares)	Jobs created (gross)	Private investment (£million)
London Docklands	31 March 1998	709.0	63,025	6,084.4
Merseyside	31 March 1998	342.0	14,458	394.0
Black Country	31 March 1998	257.7	13,357	690.0
Teesside	31 March 1998	355.6	7,682	837.3
Trafford Park	31 March 1998	142.3	16,197	914.6
Tyne and Wear	31 March 1998	456.4	19,649	758.4
Bristol	31 December 1995	60.0	4,250	200.0
Sheffield	31 March 1997	234.5	11,342	553.1
Central Manchester	31 March 1996	33.0	4,909	344.8
Leeds	31 March 1995	68.0	9,066	357.0
Birmingham Heartlands	31 March 1998	54.0	1,773	106.8
Plymouth	31 March 1998	5.5	8	0

All corporations except Leeds are still in existence.

Responsibility for the Cardiff bay and Laganside development corporations lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

All outputs are cumulative to 31 March 1995.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses the Housing Corporation has built in rural areas; and how many he expects to be built in (a) 1996 and 1997 and (b) in each year since 1992. [2641]

Mr. Clappison: Since 1989–90, some 10,800 new homes have been approved in rural areas—defined as settlements with a population of 3,000 or less—through the Housing Corporation's rural programme. Of these, some 1,660 new homes were completed in 1992–93, 1,700 in 1993–94 and 1,890 in 1994–95. Rural schemes can be more difficult to develop and take longer to reach completion. We have therefore enabled the Housing Corporation to enhance grants to housing associations from 1996–97 to recognise the higher costs of developing small schemes in villages.

Forecast figures for future years will not be available until early in the new year, when the Housing Corporation has finalised its approved development programme.

Out-of-town Supermarkets

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from organisations representing small rural businesses expressing concern about the impact on their trade of out-of-town supermarkets in the last year. [2574]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have received a small number of representations from rural business interests and local authorities in response to the draft PPG6 and the consultation exercise on the rural White Paper.

Dearne Valley Partnership

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many ministerial visits have been made to the Dearne Valley Partnership since April 1992; and what has been the total cost involved of each visit. [2388]

Sir Paul Beresford: There have been 14 visits by sponsor Ministers and three visits by other DOE Ministers to the Dearne valley; information on the total cost of visits is not readily available.

Government Office for the East Midlands

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in total and by individual department the number of staff who were at the Government office for the east midlands. [2764]

Sir Paul Beresford: At the start of this financial year, 247 staff were attached to the Government office for the east midlands. Departments are currently meeting the office's pay costs in the following proportions:

Department of Trade and Industry: 36 per cent.

Department of the Environment: 33 per cent.

Department for Education and Employment: 26 per cent.

Department of Transport: 5 per cent.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the annual revenue costs of the Government office for the east midlands. [2765]

Sir Paul Beresford: GOEM's pay and non-pay running costs totalled £7.3 million in 1994–95.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources he will make available to authorities that have been or are to be reorganised on 1 April 1994, 1996 or 1997 for reorganisation costs incurred by them in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [3687]

Mr. Curry: On 27 July I invited authorities that have been, or are to be, reorganised on or before 1 April 1997 to submit estimates of the amount of expenditure that they expect to incur on transitional costs of reorganisation in 1995–96. On the basis, inter alia, of the information provided by the authorities, I have decided the maximum amounts that it would be appropriate to allocate towards such costs in 1995–96. I have given priority to authorities that are to be reorganised on 1 April 1996 and within that group, to the shadow authorities that are to become the new unitary authorities, and to the redundancy costs of authorities that are to be abolished.

The amounts are as follows:

Authority	Maximum amounts: £000s rounded 1995–96	Total 1994–95 and 1995–96
Isle of Wight
Isle of Wight council	1,750	3,494
Cleveland
Cleveland county council	2,500	—
Hartlepool borough council	3,200	3,748
Langbaurgh on Tees borough council	2,550	2,637
Middlesbrough borough council	2,160	2,354
Stockton on Tees borough council	2,930	3,428
Avon
Avon county council	2,500	—
Bristol city council	3,000	—
Woodspring district council	3,250	—
In Bath and North East Somerset, of which:	3,000	—
Bath and North East Somerset council	1,810	—
Bath city council	600	—
Wansdyke district council	590	—
In South Gloucestershire, of which:	3,000	—
South Gloucestershire council	1,800	—
Kingswood borough council	650	—
Northavon district council	550	—
Humberside
Humberside county council	2,500	—
Hull city council	3,000	—
In the East Riding of Yorkshire, of which:	3,200	—
East Riding of Yorkshire council	1,200	—
Beverley borough council	650	—
Boothferry borough council	300	—
East Yorkshire borough council	550	—
Holderness borough council	500	—
In North Lincolnshire, of which:	2,900	—
North Lincolnshire council	1,800	—
Glanford borough council	550	—
Scunthorpe borough council	550	—
In North East Lincolnshire, of which:	2,950	—
North East Lincolnshire DC	1,900	—
Cleethorpes borough council	450	—
Great Grimsby	600	—
North Yorkshire
North Yorkshire county council	1,500	—
Ryedale district council	410	—
Selby district council	510	—
In York, of which:	3,000	—
York district council	2,550	—
York city council	450	—
Total	49,310	52,824

In addition, £0.2 million has been set aside, for distribution by the Home Office, for the reorganisation costs of combined fire authorities. A reserve of £0.49 million has been retained to meet any unanticipated, exceptional, costs incurred by shadow authorities.

I have considered carefully the bids submitted by authorities that are to be, or might be, reorganised in 1997. The arrangements make it clear that these authorities would have to make an exceptional case and that priority would be given to supporting expenditures that had to be incurred in 1995–96 if reorganisation were to be implemented by the specified date, and that were of a scale that could not reasonably be found from within the authority's budget. In my view, none of the bids established a sufficiently exceptional case to justify an allocation in the current year. These authorities have, however, been invited to submit bids for 1996–97.

Government Offices for the Regions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to public funds of each of the Government offices for the region since their commencement. [1940]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The expected cost to public funds of running each of the 10 Government offices in the two years from their creation in April 1994 to the end of this financial year is as follows:

Government Office	£ Million
North-east	18.160
North-west	21.841
Yorkshire and Humberside	18.850
Merseyside	9.675
West Midlands	21.731
East Midlands	14.508
Eastern Region	12.706
South-west	14.548
South-east	17.252
London	27.484

The Government offices have replaced the regional offices of the Departments of the Environment, Trade and Industry and the training, enterprise and education directorate of the former Employment Department, which together cost £92 million in 1993–94.

Public Bodies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list annual income from (a) fees, (b) charges and (c) fines; what was the total number of staff employed (i) part time and (ii) full time; and what contribution his Department has made towards the annual running costs in each of the past three years in respect of (1) Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, (2) the British Waterways Board (3) the Health and Safety Executive, (4) the National Rivers Authority and (5) the drinking water inspectorate. [2743]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 28 November 1995]: The information is as follows with all cash figures in £ thousands and manpower figures in man-years:

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95

Notes:
[1] Fees for abstraction licences, discharge consents, navigation licences, rod licences and net licences.
[2] Charges are mainly flood defence levies on local authorities.
[3] Includes limited period employees and consultant and agency staff.
[4] NRA receives a general deficit grant (grant-in-aid) to cover the gap between its income and expenditure on functions other than flood defence. It is not hypothecated between running costs and other purposes.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

(ii) Part-time	1	0	0
Total	30	31	31
Running costs	1,180	1,413	1,660

Running costs for Drinking Water Inspectorate are funded within the Department's running costs.

Water Services (Yorkshire)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set up an independent inquiry into the management of the water supply service in the Yorkshire area. [2940]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 28 November 1995]: No. The Director Genral of Water Services is already investigating various aspects of Yorkshire Water's performance.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Deep-sea Fish

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the deep sea fish aspects of the international workshop referred to in his answer of 8 November, Official Report, column 878, considering the competitiveness and consistency of global arrangements for the management of the oceans. [124]

Mr. Baldry: The workshop will consider the key pressure points affecting the sustainability of the oceans, ocean science, linking science to management, and global arrangements for ensuing effective implementation of ocean policies. All of these issues are relevant to intergovernmental co-operation on questions related to deep sea fish.

Moroccan Tomatoes

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had with British horticulture interests over the European Union's proposals to increase access to European countries of Moroccan tomatoes. [2225]

Mr. Boswell: Growers' views on access of Moroccan tomatoes were made very clear by the NFU at the start of the negotiations.

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his opposite numbers in Spain and Portugal in connection with their requests for greater access to the European Union of Moroccan tomatoes. [2226]

Mr. Boswell: No bilateral discussions were held with Spanish and Portuguese Agriculture Ministers. The issue was discussed in the Foreign Affairs Council where all member states were represented.

Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will lay before the House the results of monitoring of the effect of the Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995; and if he will make a statement. [2490]

Mr. Boswell: The Department is planning to obtain relevant information annually from the June agricultural census and a new annual survey of tenanted land commencing in 1996. This information will be published when it becomes available.

Agriculture Fertilisers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of subsidy and grant aid for the use of lime as an agriculture fertiliser; what was the level in (a) 1965 and (b) 1970; and if he will make a statement. [2527]

Mr. Boswell: There have been no subsidies or grant aid available for the use of lime as an agriculture fertiliser since 1976. The level of subsidy in the financial year 1964–65 was £9.9 million and in 1965–66 £8.1 million. Subsidies in the financial years 1969–70 and 1970–71 totalled £4.6 million and £5 million respectively. Lime can be beneficial in certain circumstances and decisions on its application are for farmers and growers. We see no need to subsidise its use.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the highest payment made under the arable area payments scheme in England in 1994. [3020]

Mr. Baldry: For reasons of confidentiality, it is not possible to identify the highest payment under the arable area payments scheme in 1994.

Barley

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what levels of United Kingdom intervention stocks of barley were in each month since November 1994; and what the intervention price was in each month. [159]

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1995, c.198]: The information requested is as follows:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Overseas Aid

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of overseas aid to (a) sub-Saharan Africa, (b) Latin America and the Caribbean, (c) south and central asia, (d) the middle east and north Africa, (e) other Asia and Oceania and (f) eastern Europe is spent on (i) basic education, (ii) primary health care, (iii) safe drinking water, (iv) adequate sanitation, (v) family planning and (vi) nutrition. [1548]

Mr. Hanley: The requested information is available only for that bilateral expenditure which is allocable by sector. The most recent figures available are for financial year 1994–95, and are given in the table.

The categories are by economic sector and each ODA project or programme is classified to a single sector. This does not present the full picture because there will be further expenditure in each of these sectors through projects which form part of other, more general, sectors. This is particularly so for family planning, which has not been separately identified. In the calendar year 1994, it is estimated that 2.3 per cent. of total United Kingdom aid, both bilateral and multilateral, was spent on reproductive health care.

The table excludes block grants to NGOs and multilateral assistance, as it is not possible to provide a breakdown by sector. Bilateral food aid is included in the expenditure on nutrition. It is not possible to provide a sectoral breakdown of the non food aid component of emergency aid. It is likely that a significant amount of this excluded expenditure contributes to the sectors shown.

This information is provisional until the publication in December of the 1995 edition of "British Aid Statistics".

1994–95 bilateral Gross Public Expenditure (GPEX) on selected sectors as a percentage of total bilateral GPEX in specified regions

	Basic education[1]	Primary health care	Water and sanitation[2]	Nutrition[3]
Sub-Saharan Africa	2.2	4.1	1.0	7.3
Latin America and Caribbean	2.0	3.0	3.2	0.2
South and Central Asia	1.5	6.8	3.2	0.9
Middle East and North Africa	1.3	6.0	4.6	—
Other Asia and Pacific	0.7	1.5	2.1	—
Eastern Europe	—	0.2	—	0.3

[1]The amount spent on basic education comprises around 18.5 per cent. of total bilateral expenditure on education in the regions shown. As for the other categories, some additional expenditure is classified to more general sectors.
[2]Information on water and sanitation projects is presented jointly since a significant amount of expenditure in these sectors is spent on joint projects.
[3]Figures for nutrition include bilateral food aid. Other emergency aid is excluded from the table.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the overseas aid budget is used for (a) food, (b) medical supplies and equipment, (c) housing, (d) education and training programmes, (e) construction of infrastructure and (f) administration of development and aid programmes. [1544]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested in parts (c), (d) and (e) of the question is available only for that bilateral expenditure which is allocable by sector. The most recent figures available are for financial year 1994–95. Expenditure on food aid and administrative costs relates both to bilateral and multilateral aid, parts (a) and (f). It is not possible to identify separately information on medical supplies and equipment, part (b); therefore expenditure on the whole health sector is included. This information is given in the table.

The categories shown have been defined in terms of economic sector and each ODA project or programme is classified to a single sector. This does not present the full picture for the sectors shown. There will be further expenditure in each of these sectors through broad projects which form part of more general sectors.

The figure given for food aid includes emergency food aid. The table excludes other emergency aid, block grants to NGOs and multilateral aid, as a sector breakdown is not available. It is likely that a significant amount of this excluded expenditure contributes to the sectors shown.

The information is provisional until the publication in December of the 1995 edition of "British Aid Statistics".

ODA expenditure on selected sectors as a percentage of total ODA expenditure, 1994–95

	Percentage
Percentage share of total ODA programme
(a) Food aid[1]	4.1
(f) Administration	2.3

ODA expenditure on selected sectors as a percentage of total ODA expenditure, 1994–95

	Percentage
Percentage share of total ODA bilateral programme
(a) Food aid	3.3
(b) Health	7.0
(c) Housing[2]	0.5
(d) Education	10.4
(e) Construction of infrastructure[3]	12.8

[1] In 1994–95 £56.8 million of ODA's multilateral expenditure was spent on EC and UN food aid programmes in addition to £36.3 million of bilateral food aid. This includes both regular and emergency contributions.
[2] This figure includes expenditure on slum improvement projects.
[3] Infrastructure is defined according to the 1994 World Development Report to include: public utilities (energy, telecommunications, water, sanitation and sewerage), public works (roads, irrigation and drainage) and transport.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Government to reach the United Nations target of 0.7 per cent. gross national product for overseas aid. [2224]

Mr. Hanley: We have not set down a timetable for reaching the 0.7 per cent. target. Progress towards the target will depend on our economic circumstances and on other priorities for public expenditure.

In 1994, our ODA-GNP ratio was 0.31 per cent.—above the average for all OECD donors of 0.29 per cent.

Bilateral Aid Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what would be the impact on the bilateral aid programme over each of the next three years of reductions of (a) 1 per cent. (b) 5 per cent. (c) 10 per cent. and (d) 12 per cent., levels in the overall aid programme. [1591]

Mr. Hanley: It is not possible to answer this question precisely, since there is some scope to modify certain categories of multilateral spending such as contributions to new multilateral replenishments or voluntary contributions to United Nations or Commonwealth bodies.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from voluntary organisations regarding the United Kingdom's bilateral aid programme in the last year. [2118]

Mr. Hanley: In the last year, my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development and her officials have had frequent contact with voluntary organisations and non-governmental organisations. This dialogue covers a wide range of issues, including the United Kingdom's bilateral aid programme.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya about the work of the international genocide tribunal. [2568]

Mr. Hanley: We have made our views about the work of the international tribunal for Rwanda quite clear to the Government of Kenya. They have given assurances to the United Nations Security Council that they will co-operate with the tribunal.

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of the future of the Commonwealth Institute; what proposed legislation will affect the Commonwealth Institute; what recent discussions he has had with the management of the Commonwealth Institute; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of those discussions. [2900]

Mr. Hanley: Discussions have been under way since July this year between Ministers and the executive committee of the Commonwealth Institute on its future operation after March 1996. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the chairman, vice-chairman, director general and chairman of the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland on 24 October to discuss future policy. The annual general meeting on 5 December will allow future options after March 1996 to be considered.

Technical Assistance to the Commonwealth of Independent States

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will supply figures for the amount of money allocated from the TACIS programme for the environment; and what percentage of the total money allocated this represents. [1234]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 November 1995]: The amount committed under TACIS to the environment and nuclear safety sector from its inception up to the end of 1994 was 321 mecu—£242.44 million—representing 18.4 per cent. of total commitments.

Land Mines

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part the United Kingdom has played in the clearance of land mines throughout the world. [835]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 29 November 1995]: We have provided more than £17.3 million over the last four years for humanitarian mine clearance operations in Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia, northern Iraq, Laos, Mozambique, Rwanda, north-west Somalia, and Yemen.

Gambia

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what discussions he has had with the Gambian regime to ensure that free and fair elections are held in July 1996. [2754]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 November 1995]: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development had the opportunity to discuss our concerns with representatives of the regime at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Auckland and to press for a rapid return to a civilian democracy and for the full respect of human rights. The Gambia should benefit from the Millbrook programme, which is intended to advance Commonwealth fundamental political values and support the practice of Harare principles.

Mr. LLoyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the human rights situation in the Gambia in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [2753]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 November 1995]: We have received numerous representations from individuals and human rights organisations on the Gambia. We have repeatedly called on the regime to respect human rights and demonstrate its own stated commitment to return the Gambia to a civilian democracy in July 1996 by lifting the ban on political activity.

Nigeria

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international discussions he has had on the possibility of freezing the assets and accounts of the members of the Nigerian military regime. [2597]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 November 1995]: We continue to consult closely with Commonwealth, European Union and other United Nations partners on all aspects of our policy towards Nigeria. [2566]

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy in respect of Nigeria was agreed within the European Union on 20 November; and how the United Kingdom will implement it. [2598]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 November 1995]: On 20 November the European Union adopted a common position introducing visa restrictions on civilian Ministers and their families, a full arms embargo and a suspension of non-humanitarian aid. The measures agreed on Nigeria in 1993 remain in force. New and existing measures will be strictly implemented by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received from, and what meetings it has held and on which dates, with the Nigerian-British Society since November 1993.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 November 1995]: We are not aware of any such society. My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met a combined group from the British-Nigeria Association and the Nigerian-British Chamber of Commerce on 15 May, and held a meeting with representatives of the British-Nigeria Association on 24 August. Officials also have regular contact with these and other such organisations.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions were issued to the high commission in Lagos to organise meetings with representatives of (a) Shell and (b) the Ogoni people; what meetings were organised; and if he will make a statement. [2292]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 November 1995]: Our high commission in Lagos has had regular meetings with Shell, as it does with other companies operating in Nigeria as a matter of routine. It has also had regular meetings with a wide variety of groups in Nigeria, including representatives of Ogoni groups.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the export of arms to Nigeria in the last two years; and what is the current policy. [2254]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 November 1995]: Previous policy was set out in the answer given to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 2 December 1993 at column 676. On 11 November, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced a full UK arms embargo against Nigeria. On 20 November, the European Union agreed to strengthen existing restrictions on arms sales to Nigeria through a full arms embargo.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has held recently with the Government of Sri Lanka regarding provision of humanitarian aid to the Jaffna region of Sri Lanka; [2050]

(2) what discussions he has held recently with representatives of the United Nations regarding provision of humanitarian aid to Sri Lanka. [2049]

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has had with the Sri Lankan Government about offering food and medical supplies to people living in the northern area of Sri Lanka, with particular reference to Jaffna to alleviate suffering and hardship caused by the present conflict; and if he will make a statement; [1782]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Sri Lankan Government on food and medical aid being made available by the British Government to the Tamil community in northern Sri Lanka; [1705]

(3) what reports he has received from the British high commissioner in Sri Lanka on the present conflict that is taking place, with special reference to the facilities which exist to help people who have become refugees as a result of the conflict; and if he will make a statement. [1702]

Mr. Hanley: The high commissioner in Colombo has frequent and extensive discussions with the Sri Lankan Government and with relief agencies about the conflict and the humanitarian situation in the north of the country.

I refer the hon. Members to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Ilford, South, (Mr. Gapes) on 21 and 22 November at columns 67–8 and 111.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Research and Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the indicative contributions to the EU Budget in respect of research and development for his Department in 1993–94. [1914]

Sir John Wheeler: Table 2.1 of the statistical supplement to the "Forward Look of Government—funded Science, Engineering and Technology" contains indicative figures for the United Kingdom's contributions to the EC budget in respect of research and development. My Department does not have any policy responsibilities for Community R and D expenditure.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the figures on revenue collected by the Child Support Agency in his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 252, with reference to the latest data available and also show for each month since April 1994 (a) the amount of revenue demanded attributable to type A interim assessments and (b) the amount which offsets state funds. [2266]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 28 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about revenue collected by the Child Support Agency.

You asked for updated information on maintenance assessed, scheduled for payment and collected via the Agency collection service. The available information on maintenance scheduled for payment and collected by the Agency is set out in the attached table, together with how much of the maintenance collected each month has offset benefit spending. During 1994–95, 65% of maintenance collected offset benefit spending, compared with 54% to date this year.

Additionally, between April and September 1995 £61.46 million arising from Agency assessments was paid direct between parents who do not use the Agency's collection service.

Information on the amount of revenue attributable to Type 'A' interim assessments is not available.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedure exists for the payment of arrears to the Child Support Agency by instalments. [2387]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 28 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about payments of arrears by instalments to the Child Support Agency.

If an absent parent (AP) falls into arrears without contacting the Agency then every effort is made to get in touch with him to determine why payments have fallen behind. He will be asked to make up the missing payments, but if there is a problem, the Agency arranges an arrears agreement with the AP.

The arrears agreement negotiated is based on the amount of debt and the AP's ability to pay. It is made clear to the AP that he will not be expected to pay more than 33% of his net income in regular payment and arrears.

The welfare of any children involved is considered when deciding how much to enforce and officers are trained to negotiate the most reasonable level of payment in the interests of all parties.

Where arrears are in respect of the initial payment period, the possibility of deferring debt other than that appropriate to the most recent 26 weeks can be considered in certain circumstances, where the delay in making the assessment has been substantially due to the Agency. In these circumstances, the arrears agreement is based on that 26 weeks arrears total.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will say what the procedure is for collecting arrears of Child Support from a husband who pays directly to his wife. [2386]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 28 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about collection of arrears by the Child Support Agency.

Where child maintenance is paid directly to the parent with care (PWC) by the absent parent (AP), the Agency only becomes aware arrears when the PWC get in touch to advise us of the AP's failure to pay. If the PWC wishes the Agency to pursue the arrears she may do so by requesting the collection and enforcement service at any time. The current moratorium of fees means that no further fee will be levied for this service.

If we are asked to undertake collection and enforcement action, the Agency confirms the amount of unpaid maintenance with the AP and arranges an arrears agreement with him. Collection is then made via the Agency so that we can monitor the arrears agreement and take any necessary action to ensure regular payments of maintenance, including enforcement action if this becomes essential.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of deduction of earning orders issued by the Child Support Agency since April 1994 (a) against type A interim assessments and (b) against full maintenance assessments. [2267]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 28 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency assessments.

From April 1994 to September 1995, 54,093 deduction of earnings orders have been issued by the Agency. Of these 14,478 were issued on interim maintenance assessments and 39,615 on full maintenance assessments.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown of the weekly maintenance being paid in cases where absent parents are paying child support maintenance by way of a deduction of earnings order. [1238]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 28 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency deduction of earnings orders.

The latest information I am able to supply is that the Child Support Agency is currently collecting in excess of £996,000 maintenance per week from absent parents, by means of deductions of earnings orders.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Child Support Agency cases have arrangements to pay via the agency's collection service; and how many are (a) fully paid and (b) partially paid indicating the numbers of (i) type A interim maintenance assessments and (ii) full assessments. [1237]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 28 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about cases using the Child Support Agency collection service. The breakdown you requested is shown in the table.

	Number of cases involving type A interim maintenance assessments	Number of cases involving full maintenance assessments
Fully paid[1]	6,545	39,661
Partially paid[2]	15,979	73,789
Not paid	60,947	17,370
Total	83,471	130,820

[1] Full compliance—no payments outstanding.
[2] Partial compliance—at least one payment received in the last 13 weeks.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria have to be fulfilled for an absent parent to be classified as making regular maintenance payments. [1236]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 28 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency assessments.

You asked what criteria have to be fulfilled for an absent parent to be classified as making regular maintenance payments. An absent parent is considered to be complying in full if all outstanding payments have been received; and partially if at least one payment has been received in the last 13 weeks.

I hope this is helpful.

War Widows' Pensions

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the level of resources allocated to the payment of war widows' pensions. [2832]

Mr. Heald: These are matters for Mr. John Sheppard, the acting chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Sheppard to Mr. Den Dover, dated 28 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the level of resources allocated to the payment of War Widows Pensions.

As at 27 November, a total of 98 staff are employed on dealing with all aspects of war widows claims. Included in this figure are 45 members of staff dealing with the restoration of War Widows Pension under the Pensions Act, which came into effect on 19 July 1995. Agency expenditure in this financial year for all the above is expected to be £780,000.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been prosecuted in each year since 1987 for using bogus national insurance numbers. [1989]

Mr. Heald: There is no separately identifiable offence of using a bogus national insurance number. However, the use of a false NINO can form the basis of a prosecution under section 112 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 or other legislation such as the Theft Act 1978. A person may be guilty of an offence if he supplies to the Department, for a purpose connected with social security legislation, information he knows to be false. The number of prosecutions involving false or misappropriated NINOs is not separately available.

Social Fund

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amounts, in cash terms, have been spent on the administration of the social fund for each year since its inception; and what percentage of the total fund this represented in each year. [2082]

Mr. Roger Evans: Social fund administration costs are met separately from expenditure from the regulated and discretionary fund. The figures requested are set out in the table; 1993–94 is the latest year for which figures on administration costs are available.

Year	Administration cost (£ million)	Percentage of gross expenditure	Percentage of total gross expenditure plus recoveries
1989–90	77	32.1	22.1
1990–91	132	48.5	33.3
1991–92	163	48.2	33.5
1992–93	208	51.9	35.3
1993–94	270	61.1	41.4

The table compares administration costs in each year since 1988–89 to the fund's gross expenditure—that is, the money paid out. However, the fund's business involves paying money out and recovering the amounts awarded as loans. A more accurate reflection of the work needed to operate the fund would therefore be a comparison between administration costs and gross expenditure plus recoveries, and this information is also given in the table.

In 1990–91 the basis of the calculation of administration costs changed, and so direct comparisons with previous years are not possible.

In both 1992–93 and 1993–94 the rise in administration costs is largely attributable to expenditure on the new social fund computer system, which was purchased and put in place during those years.

Local Government

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the Acts of Parliament including Consolidation Acts that affect local government that have been introduced by his Department since January 1994. [39]

Mr. Burt: The Jobseeker's Act 1995 section 18.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) DSS income support expenditure for residents in private and voluntary residential nursing homes and (b) the number of claimants in Scotland between 1979 and 1994. [1142]

Mr. Roger Evans: No data for Scotland are available prior to 1988. The available information is set out in the table:

Number of claimants and income support expenditure on residents in residential care and nursing homes in Scotland

Number of claimants

Year	Residential care	Nursing homes	Residential allowance	Annualized Cost £ million
1988	6,000	4,000	—	62
1989	6,000	4,000	—	65
1990	9,000	6,000	—	98
1991	9,000	9,000	—	145
1992	10,000	12,000	—	201
1993	10,000	11,000	—	219
1994	8,000	9,000	5,000	208

Notes:

1. Figures prior to 1994 are a "snap-shot" taken at a particular month each year. From 1988 the month of the inquiry was May.
2. Numbers have been rounded to the nearest thousand and expenditure to the nearest million.
3. Expenditure for 1994 has been calculated by adding together the estimated quarterly expenditure May 1993–February 1994 (number of cases multiplied by average Income Support multiplied by 13). Expenditure prior to 1994 has been calculated by multiplying the number of cases by the average weekly Income Support and multiplying by 52. For 1990 and 1991 average Income Support for Scotland is not known and the figure for Great Britain has been used.
4. Residential Allowance was introduced in April 1993. Figures for 1993 are negligible. For 1994 the figures shown are for preserved rights cases split by residential care and nursing homes and Residential Allowance for which no equivalent split is available.

Cold Weather Payments

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners received cold weather payments in each region over the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [1091]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits (Savings)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the financial savings that will be made by (a) the proposed changes to entitlements to social security benefits for asylum seekers, (b) other announced changes to entitlements to social security benefits and (c) other planned changes to entitlements to social security benefits; and if he will make a statement. [2349]

Mr. Roger Evans: The savings as a result of the proposed changes to social security benefits for asylum seekers are estimated to amount to £300 million a year by the year 2000–01.

As a result of measures announced today and in the previous two Budgets it is estimated that £5 billion a year in benefit expenditure will be saved by 2000–01.

Both these figures are in 1995–96 prices.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time a claimant receives disability working allowance, including awards on renewal. [1836]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell [holding answer 24 November 1995]: As at 30 April 1995, the average length of time a claimant received disability working allowance, including awards on renewal, was 46 weeks[1].

[1] This figure relates to all awards, both completed and current at 30 April 1995.

WALES

Staff (Town and Country Planning)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many members of staff are employed in the town and country planning section of the Welsh Office at Cathays park; and if he will make a statement. [2804]

Mr. Hague: The number of staff employed by my Department who work on town and country planning matters is 50.8 full-time equivalents.

These include staff working in planning inspectorate in Wales.

Beef Special Premium Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the beef annual premium was paid to farmers in Wales in (a) 1991, (b) 1992, (c) 1993, (d) 1994 and (e) 1995. [2803]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office assumed responsibility for the scheme in 1993. Payments were previously made, under the different scheme rules that were then in place, by the Intervention Board, as and when cattle were presented for slaughter or marketed with a view to slaughter.

Since the Welsh Office took over the scheme, payments began in the following months:

1993: December

1994: November

1995: November

Poverty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of people in Wales living in poverty; what plans he has to reduce this figure; and if he will make a statement. [2731]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No Government of any political persuasion have ever accepted that it is possible to define poverty in a meaningful way.

Statistics on patterns of household disposable income, for the United Kingdom as a whole, are provided in "Households Below Average Income 1979–1992/93", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Information for Wales is not available separately.

Textile Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons are currently employed in the textile and garment making industry in Wales. [2919]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available figures are for 1993 when, according to the census of employment, the number of employees employed in the manufacture of textiles and wearing apparel in Wales was 12,300.

School Transport

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has issued to local authorities with regard to escort provision on school transport services. [2928]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office Circular 19/95 "Home to School Transport", which was issued on 10 May 1995, contains guidance about local education authorities' responsibilities in providing supervision on school transport.

A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what new initiatives he proposes to improve safety on school buses; [2929]

(2) if he will review the current advice given to local authorities with regard to the maximum numbers of pupils per seat on school transport. [2927]

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

I hope to lay two sets of regulations before the House later this autumn. The first will require seat belts to be fitted in minibuses and coaches used specifically for the transport of children. The second will remove the concession allowing three seated children, under 14 to count as two passengers, when travelling on public service vehicles fitted with seat belts.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the planned expenditure for housing in Wales for the year 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [2925]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend will be announcing the details of his public expenditure decisions for 1996–97 in December.

Clinical Negligence Claims

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) the number of cases reported alleging clinical negligence, (b) the total amount of money claimed in these cases, (c) the total amount of money advised by trust solicitors or otherwise resolved by trusts in settlement of such claims, and (d) the figures for (c) expressed as a percentage of turnover, for each health trust and for Wales as whole for each of the last two years for which information is available. [641]

Mr. Richards: I will write to the hon. Member and will place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Council Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list for each district council in constant 1995 prices the actual amount collected in council tax within each band and in average terms for each available year since its introduction, indicating also the corresponding amounts collected per household; [1850]

(2) if he will list for each unitary council and for Wales as a whole (a) the estimated council tax which would be collected based on the latest provisional assessments issued to councils by his office and (b) the actual council tax levied during 1995–96 for each band and in average terms, indicating also the corresponding amounts collected per household; and if he will make a statement. [1851]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is given in the following tables. Table 1 gives the amounts of council tax budgeted to be collected by each authority at the beginning of each financial year. This information is not collected by band. The average per dwelling is based on the number of dwellings liable for the council tax in the relevant year.

Table 2 gives the available, equivalent information for unitary authorities.

The figures for the implied council tax levels in 1995–96 have been derived from the final disaggregated budget and indicative standard spending assessments issued on 27 October. These redistribute 1995–96 budgets and SSAs for the existing councils to the new authorities. Weighted band D taxes, based on the actual 1995–96 taxes set in each district area within the new unitary boundaries, are given together with estimates of the amount which would have been raised by that level of tax. Per dwelling averages are not available.

On 30 October, I announced that a scheme would be introduced to damp the increases in council tax arising from the disaggregation exercise.

Students

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students in Wales applied for student loans in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement. [2338]

Mr. Hague: These are matters for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the acting chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students in Wales applied for hardship funds in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement. [2339]

Mr. Hague: Since the academic year 1990–91 institutions in Wales have received student access funds so that they may provide financial help to students in financial difficulties. Institutions may supplement these funds from their own resources.

The number of students in the former public sector further and higher education institutions in Wales applying for assistance from the access funds in the academic years 1990–91 to 1993–94 is as follows:

1991–92: 3,827

1993–94: 3,317.

Information on applications to the colleges of the university of Wales is not available prior to 1993–94. In that year, 3,260 students applied for assistance from the access funds. Information for academic year 1994–95 is not yet available.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average grant received by undergraduate students in Wales in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement. [2340]

Mr. Hague: The average net maintenance grants, after means-testing, received by mandatory award holders in Wales in the academic years 1990–91 to 1993–94 are set out in the following table. Since 1990–91, eligible students have also had access to non-means-tested student loans.

Average net maintenance grants to holders of mandatory awards (£) Wales: 1990–91 to 1993–94

Academic year	Average net maintenance grant paid by local education authorities[1]
1990–91	1,590
1991–92	1,620
1992–93	1,690
1993–94	1,740

[1]To the nearest £10.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research has been undertaken in the last five years by his Department into the level of students suffering from stress and depression; and if he will make a statement. [2341]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department has taken to improve the welfare and counselling services to students in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [2342]

Mr. Hague: As autonomous bodies, it is for individual further and higher education institutions to ensure that such services are sufficient to enable students to take full advantage of the educational opportunities available to them.

Dental Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average annual payment, for each of the last three years for which figures are available, for patients who paid for NHS dental treatment, per family health services authority; and if he will make a statement. [2763]

Mr. Hague: Information about patient charges is held on the basis of individual courses of treatment rather than per patient. The estimated average patient charge per course of treatment is given in the following table:

	Year ending March (£)
Family health services authority	1993 £	1994 £	1995 £
Clwyd	19.65	18.91	20.06
Dyfed	20.16	19.61	20.34
Gwent	20.47	19.45	20.34
Gwynedd	18.88	18.06	17.82
Mid Glamorgan	20.60	19.69	20.60
Powys	20.49	20.16	21.72
South Glamorgan	19.97	19.76	21.36
West Glamorgan	18.78	18.41	19.09

Exempt patients and patients receiving remission from charges are excluded. The year relates to the date on which payment for treatment was authorised by the Dental Practice Board.

Assisted Places Scheme

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to extend the assisted places schemes in Wales. [3685]

Mr. Hague: As I mentioned in the Welsh Grand Committee earlier today, I proposed to double the number of places available under the assisted places scheme in Wales over a period of time. Over 700 pupils in Wales are currently benefiting from the scheme which makes an important contribution to our policy of parental choice, diversity and excellence in education.

I propose to invite bids for additional places from schools already participating in the scheme and other schools which have reached an appropriate standard. Schools must be able to provide a broad and balanced curriculum and have a good record of performance in public examinations.

Bids will be invited for places at age 11 or 13, where there is currently a high demand, and at sixth form, bids will also be invited for places for children below age 11 years in junior departments which form an integral part of secondary schools.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the outturn figures for regional selective assistance (a) offers and (b) payments for 1994–95; and if he will indicate how these figures related to the original budgeted plans for that year. [2110]

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1995, c. 414]: I regret that there was an error in my answer. The reference for the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual report should have been HC 723, not Cm 723 as quoted.

DEFENCE

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by agency staff (a) the costs of the travel, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned. [2288]

Mr. Arbbuthnot: This is a matter for the agencies concerned. I have asked the chief executives to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from N. R. Essenhigh to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

Your question to the Secretary of State asking about overseas travel in 1994/95 has been passed to me for reply as Chief Executive of the Hydrographic Office.

The overseas travel costs incurred by the Agency in 1994/95 were £123,252.11. A list of the countries visited is at Annex A; and the posts held by the staff concerned is at Annex B.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from Alan Pollard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Minister to reply to your parliamentary question on overseas travel by Defence Agency Staff during Financial Year 1994–95. LISA was formed on 21 November 1994 and the figures listed at the Annex to this letter are based on travel after that date and before 1 April 1995. The figures do not include my staff travelling on RAF flights in support of operations, since I do not hold such costs. If you require further details please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from Philip Wildman to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

1. The Secretary of State has asked me to reply direct to your question seeking details of overseas travel undertaken by the staff of this Defence Agency in Financial Year 1994–95. I regret that the Chief Executive is unable to reply personally due to absence.

2. The answers you require are as follows:

(a) Cost of Travel—£578,000 excluding costs of centrally provided trooping services e.g. Washington and British Forces Germany.

(b) Countries Visited—see Annex A attached.

(c) Posts Held by Staff Concerned—

(1) Serial 1—Headquarters

Director General and supporting staff.

(2) Serial 2—Commitments

Commitments staff are responsible for MOD geographic policy and its related NATO and international aspects.

(3) Serial 3—Acquisition

Acquisition staff are responsible for the development and maintenance of highly cost-effective exchange agreements which enable Military Survey to obtain the geographic data essential for Defence needs world-wide.

(4) Serial 4—Production and Information Systems

Production staff travel is undertaken to manage the technical aspects of NATO and international coproduction and burden-sharing agreements. In addition, some travel by Information Systems staff is in support of standards and compatibility work to facilitate the international exchange of geographic data.

3. I hope you find this information useful.

Letter from Jim Drew to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

I have been asked to reply, as Chief Executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO), to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State if he will list for the FY 94/95 details in respect of overseas travel as follows:

a. costs of travel

b. countries visited

c. posts held by staff who visited those countries.

I detail below the information in respect of ABRO:

Grade		Destination	Subsistence Cost (£)
G7	Production	Canada	501
SPTO	Engineers	Paris, Sweden, Germany	884
HPTO		Paris, Sweden, Belgium, Germany, Luxembourg	2,388
RO1	Supply	Germany	119
EO	Managers	Germany	104
Med/Dent	Repair	Belize	465
Sen C/Hand	Technicians	Belgium	181
Total			4,642

The total commercial air costs were £4,783, which has proven difficult to break down in the time available and does not include air trooping flights for which we are not charged. The first 3 elements in the above table were directly related to repair support contracts in place with commercial companies based in these countries: the remainder were routine staffing meetings with our customers and suppliers.

Therefore, the total overseas travel costs were £9,425.

Letter from Michael Maycroft to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Defence to reply to your Parliamentary Question about overseas travel by agency staff. As the Chief Executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency (DCTA) I can advise you of the following information in respect of this agency.

Letter from Richard Kyle to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 November 1995:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence for details of overseas travel by agency staff. I have been asked to reply as the Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Maintenance Group Defence Agency.

I regret that the information you request is not readily available in the form required. The vast majority of journeys carried out by the Royal Air Force Maintenance Group Defence Agency personnel involved the distribution of Service Freight and the maintenance of equipment located overseas. The cost of travel for the last financial year was £699,652. The countries visited during the period are listed as an attachment to this letter. Unfortunately, details of specific posts held by staff are not readily available.

I hope that this information is helpful to you.

Letter from Peter Ayee to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

I write as Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment (RAFSEE) Defence Agency in response to your Parliamentary Question, No 9363 of 23 November 1995, to the Secretary of State for Defence.

The role of the Agency is to design, install and recover ground signals systems and selected airborne equipment for its operational customers in the UK and overseas. In carrying out these tasks, RAFSEE design and installation staff visited locations in Germany, Cyprus, USA, Belgium, Dubai and Gibraltar on a total of 52 occasions in the period between Agency launch on 22 November 1994 and the end of the Financial Year. The total cost was £54,253.

Letter from John Clarke to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question, about details of overseas travel by Agency staff during the last financial year, in my capacity as Chief Executive of the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency.

You will wish to be aware that the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency (NRTA) came into being on 1 April 1995 and, as such, was not an executive agency during the period of the last financial year.

Letter from Brian Raine to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about overseas travel by Agency staff.

Our Bursar did travel to Halifax, Nova Scotia Canada in order to reconnoitre the situation at the International Tattoo in Halifax in preparation for our Pipe Band going there in June 1995. The cost of the trip was £609.20.

Letter from W. E. Spreadbury to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

In the absence of the Chief Executive on duty, I am replying to your enquiry concerning overseas travel by agency staff.

The details you requested are:-

(a) £2,185

(b) Germany, for Rhine Army Show

(c) Headmaster, Publicity Officer and four pupils.

Letter from J. M. Powell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

1. I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Defence to reply to your Parliamentary Question.

2. The specific answers are as follows:

(a) The costs of travel during FY 1994/95 were £155,946.

(b) Travel in Europe related solely to training and the management of schools within SCS (NWE) in Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Italy. In addition one visit was made to service schools in Cyprus.

(c) The posts held by staff travelling were:

i. travel in Germany was by all staff of SCS (NWE).

ii. travel elsewhere was by the Chief Executive, three Assistant Chief Executives, the Budget manager, Finance manager, Personnel manager, Contracts manager, members of their staff, Headteachers and members of the Inspection Advisory Service.

3. However, it must be appreciated that the Service Children's Schools (North West Europe) Agency with its Headquarters in Rheindahlen Germany is concerned with the operation of service schools in North West Europe, where 80% of service families posted overseas are stationed. Therefore whilst all travel undertaken by Agency staff is "overseas" this represents no more than the normal discharge of duties; The only exception was a four day liaison visit to Cyprus by the Chief Executive.

4. If you require any further information or clarification please contact this Headquarters.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Next Steps Agencies and how this relates to my Agencies.

The responses to your questions in the order put to me are:

In the last financial year DASA spent £547 on overseas travel.

The country visited was France.

The trip was for one Grade 6.

Letter from Keith Ellender to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

I am replying on behalf of the Disposal Sales Agency to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about overseas travel.

The information in respect of my Agency is as follows:

Letter from John May to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence on overseas travel by the staff of executive agencies during the last financial year has nevertheless been passed to me to answer in respect of the Royal Air Force Training Group Defence Agency.

The breakdown of the information you ask for is not collected centrally within the Agency or by any other branch of the Royal Air Force. The cost of any trawl to determine the statistics you require would take extensive and un-resourced clerical effort, at a cost that would substantially outweigh any benefit arising from the answer. Nor have we any plans for our future financial and management accounting systems to access discrete data of this nature. It is a principle of good business management that authorization of and accounting for overseas travel should be delegated to the lowest proper level and accommodated within overall travel and subsistence budgets. I therefor regret that I am unable to help you further.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Agency's owner, the Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief Personnel & Training Command.

Letter from I. A. Lumsden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your Parliamentary Question regarding details of overseas travel in the year 1994–95. The Chief Executive is absent on leave and I am standing in for him.

During this period no official overseas travel was undertaken by any civilian members of the Defence Animal Centre. Service personnel travelled to normal service destinations as part of their duties. To obtain further detail on military travel would, however, be disproportionately costly if indeed it were possible.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

I have been asked to respond on behalf of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about overseas travel by agency staff.

DERA does not hold centrally information about the overseas travel of our staff and I regret this could only be collected at disproportionate cost. I should explain that the Agency, which employs over 12,000 staff at over 50 sites in the UK, is organised into five operating divisions. These, in turn, consist of Business Sectors each of which has been delegated considerable managerial and financial freedoms to conduct their affairs in response to customer requirements. Overseas travel is one of the areas which has been delegated and our local managers have the authority to employ a variety of means to make cost effective travel arrangements. It would be disproportionately costly to seek details of all overseas travel by all DERA staff over the last year in these circumstances.

I am sorry that I could not be more helpful on this occasion.

Letter from Tweedie McBrown to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, PQ 2288, concerning overseas travel by Defence Agency staff has ben passed to me. As Head of the Defence Postal & Courier Services Agency (DPCSA), I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Secretary of State in respect of travel by staff from within my Agency.

The DPCSA exists to provide a postal and courier service to MoD/Service establishments in the UK and throughout the rest of the world. My Agency also undertakes work on behalf of other Government Departments, particularly the Foreign & Commonwealth Office. In fulfilling our role we therefore send significant number of staff abroad on a regular basis.

During FY 1994/95 the Agency spent £638k on civil airline and RAF transport costs. In addition, foreign accommodation and subsistence amounted to £79k.

The Courier Service operates scheduled delivery services for classified material to most countries in which HM Forces personnel are serving, and to HM Ships wherever they operates. We also provide non-scheduled special services when the need arises. The Postal Service operates a scheduled service for non-classified mail to HM Forces serving throughout the world, including HM Ships and UN Forces in locations such as Bosnia.

Almost all of the foreign travel & accommodation costs relate to Defence Couriers. These are civilian (ex military) staff employed for the sole purpose of providing the courier service. Military staff from the Agency were also sent abroad to support military operations, particularly in Bosnia. Overseas travel by senior Agency staff is limited to visiting British Forces Post Offices (BFPOs) and other military facilities and is infrequent.

I hope you find this information helpful. Should you require any further information please let me know.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

I have been asked to respond to your recent question to the Defence Secretary concerning overseas travel by executive agency staff.

In 1994–95 the cost of overseas civil air travel and subsistence for Meteorological Office staff is estimated to have been some £560,000. The costs were incurred in pursuit of the Meteorological Office's role as a member of the international meteorological community.

The countries visited were:

Africa

South America

Unfortunately information on the posts held by the staff concerned is not available.

I am sorry that I am unable to reply fully to your question but I hope the information I have given will be of help.

Correspondence

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to write to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak giving the information requested on the cost of ministeral transport in each of the past five years, on allowances paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles and on the cost in each of the past five years as undertaken on 3 November, Official Report, column 476.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I wrote to the hon. Member yesterday.

Indonesian Armed Forces (Training)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Indonesian armed forces have received training at United Kingdom armed forces institutions in each year since 1983. [3138]

Mr. Soames: The UK has provided training for Indonesian students during this period. Details of training, including the numbers involved, are, however, regarded as confidential between Governments.

Anti-tank Mines

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to enhance the Army's anti-tank mine capability; and if he will make a statement. [3609]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have agreed to the procurement of 29 vehicle-launched scatterable mine systems from Alliant Techsystems of the United States, subject to the satisfactory conclusion of a contract. VLSMS will provide the Army with a key capability to lay anti-tank minefields at short notice in support of armoured formations. This decision will result in work equivalent to around half the value of the contract being undertaken by UK firms as part of the industrial participation arrangements of the programme, including work for Alvis, which makes the Stormer carrier vehicle.

Equipment Programmes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the effect on in-service dates for each major equipment programme listed in tables 3, 4 and 5 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1995" of the Budget settlement for defence. [2271]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The settlement provides the resources necessary to maintain and enhance the front-line capabilities of the armed forces, and to provide the support they need to carry out their wide range of tasks.

Army Surgeons

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of regular Army surgeons employed by his Department in each of the last five years. [2054]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 23 November 1995]: The number of trained specialist, senior specialist and consultant regular Army surgeons, comprising the disciplines of general surgery, ophthalmics, burns and plastics, maxillo-facial, orthopaedics and ear-nose-throat—oto-rhino-laryngology— employed during each of the last four years is as follows:

1993: 63

1992: 61.

The grade of specialist is not deployable to meet the war commitment for surgeons. Figures are not available for 1991.

"Partnership for Peace"

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given to Russian officers on the civic education in a democracy and human rights in the armed services under NATO's "Partnership for Peace" programme; and if he will make a statement. [2768]

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

One of the main objectives of "Partnership for Peace" is to ensure democratic control of the armed forces. Russia has indicated interest, through their individual partnership programme in the following related areas:

Civil democratic control over the armed forces.

Role and functions of the armed forces in a democratic society.

Legislation concerning the armed forces in a democratic society.

Relations between the military and civilians in a democratic society.

Implementation of Russia's IPP has not yet commenced.

The United Kingdom is, however, undertaking bilateral initiatives in this area. As part of our Outreach programme, a seminar, "Armed Forces and Society", is to be held in London from 12 to 14 December. Representatives from the Russian Ministry of Defence are expected to attend.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Transsexuals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to allow a change in the legal status of post-operative transsexuals; and if he will make a statement. [2351]

Mr. Kirkhope: None.

Ticket Touting

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the value of the ticket touting market; and if he will make a statement. [2353]

Mr. Maclean: My Department has no such estimate.

Juries

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary for the Home Department what measures are in place to ensure that juries represent the social mix in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [2350]

Mr. Maclean: It is a fundamental principle of our jury system that juries should as far as possible represent a cross-section of society drawn at random from the community as a whole. Any person between the ages of 18 and 70 is eligible to serve on a jury, unless they are disqualified in one of a number of specified ways.

Passports

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the introduction of machine-readable passports. [2917]

Mr. Kirkhope: The phased introduction of the machine-readable passport commenced in 1988 and was completed in 1991. Since then, all passports issued in the United Kingdom have been machine-readable.

Prisons

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the capacity of United Kingdom prisons, per category and in total, for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [2343]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 29 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the capacity of United Kingdom prisons, by category and in total for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Prisons in England and Wales are defined by operational function and an establishment will have, according to its particular function, accommodation designed for holding prisoners up to a particular security category.

Information on the security standard of accommodation available on 23 November 1995 at closed and open training prisons and local prisons in England and Wales is given in table one, attached.

The only information available for the previous five years (1990–95) is that published annually in "Prisons Statistics, England and Wales". This information is given in table two.

Table 1: Certified normal accommodation for use in prisons in England and Wales by Security Category and in total on 23 November 1995

	Security standard of accommodation	Certified normal accommodation in use
Closed Training Prisons (Dispersals)	Category A	3,698
Belmarsh Prison Category A unit	Category A	48
Other Closed Training Prisons	Category B	3,022
	Category C	14,414
Local Prisons and Remand Centres	Category B	18,606
Open Training Prisons	Category D	3,893
Closed Female Prisons	—	1,520
Open Female Prisons	—	593
Closed Young Offender Institutions	—	4,052
Open Young Offender Institutions	—	1,482
Total		51,328

Notes:

1. Some of the more secure local prisons also hold Category A prisoners as and when necessary. A formal maximum number of places for this purpose is not designated.
2. With the exception of those categorised A, convicted and sentenced female prisoners and young offenders are not normally categorised, but are allocated to open or closed conditions.
3. There are currently only three sentenced Category A female prisoners. All are held at Durham Prison.

Table 2: Certified normal accommodation in use on 30 June by Security Category, 1990–1994

	Security standard of accommodation	Certified normal accommodation in use
		1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Closed Training Prisons (including Dispersal prisons)	Category A, B and C	17,073	18,602	19,487	19,210	19,206
Local Prisons and Remand Centres	Category B	13,593	13,823	15,565	16,206	18,103
Open Training Prisons	Category D	3,496	3,434	3,674	3,581	3,745
Female Prisons (Closed and Open)	—	1,773	1,776	1,765	1,782	1,863
All Young Offender Institutions	—	6,869	6,240	5,748	5,867	5,374
Total		42,804	43,875	46,239	46,646	48,291

1994 Statistics are due to be published in January 1996.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the population in custody, per category and in total; and if he will make a statement. [2344]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 29 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the latest prison population figure by category of prisoner and in total.

The information requested is given in the attached table.

Number of prisoners held in England and Wales on 23 November 1995 by category and in total

	Number
Category A	826
Category B	7,969
Category C	17,529
Category D	2,926
Uncategorised or awaiting categorisation	23,161
Total	52,411

1. Female prisoners and young offenders are only given a security category when category A is applicable.
2. Unless category A is applicable, adult male prisoners are not given a security category until after conviction and sentence.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average waiting time for a decision to be made on an application for asylum; and if he will make a statement; [2345]

(2) what is the average waiting time between an initial rejection of an application for asylum and the hearing of an appeal; and if he will make a statement. [2346]

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the speed with which asylum applications are processed. [1676]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Newcastle Upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) on 22 November, Official Report, column 219, which gave the available information on the average times involved in deciding applications for asylum.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of visitors and short-term students who have overstayed in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990 or asked for political asylum; and if he will name the country from which these people came. [2834]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on the number of visitors and students who have overstayed in the United Kingdom is not available. The estimated proportion of asylum-seekers since 1990 who had entered the United Kingdom in another capacity before submitting their asylum application is given in the table. A nationality breakdown of these figures is not available.

Proportion of in-country[1] asylum applicants who had been granted leave in another capacity[2] before applying for asylum

Year	Number of in-country applications	Of which proportion submitted In-time Percentage	Out of time Percentage	Other[3] Percentage
1990	17,200	45	9	46
1991	35,815	32	5	63
1992	22,370	53	13	34
1993	15,050	43	18	39
1994	22,600	36	17	47

[1] Applications submitted after entry into the United Kingdom.
[2] Include those granted leave to enter or remain in other capacities as well as visitors and students.
[3] Includes illegal entrants and those whose status was unknown.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the European countries which operate special asylum procedures to deal with cases where the applicant is a national of a country in which there is no serious risk of persecution. [550]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 22 November, Official Report, column 220.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently being held in detention in police stations; what is the length of time of their detention (a) in police stations (b) in total; and if he will present this information according to the nationality of the asylum seekers. [1524]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 23 November 1995]: As at 21 November 1995, 14 people who had sought asylum were being detained in police cells. Of these, five are Nigerians and four are Algerians.

The longest period of time that any of these people have been detained in a police cell is seven nights. This is the maximum time that a person who has claimed asylum can be detained in police cells if removal directions have been set. If removal directions have not been set, a person can be detained for up to five nights.

Refugees

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that his proposals for reform of asylum and immigration rules do not contradict commitments made under the 1951 United Nations refugee convention; and if he will make a statement. [2347]

Miss Widdecombe: As my right hon. and learned Friend made clear in his statement to the House on 20 November, all our proposals for further measures are consistent with our international obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees.

Extradition

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received extradition requests from the Italian Government in respect of Roberto Fiore and Massimo Morsello. [2550]

Mr. Kirkhope: It is not Government policy to confirm or deny the existence of extradition requests from foreign Governments, unless they are already made public, for example, following court proceedings. Italian requests for the extradition of Roberto Fiore and Massimo Morsello failed in 1982 when the courts found an insufficiency of evidence under the prima facie case standard which then applied. Since 1991 a lesser standard under section 7 of the Extradition Act 1989 is required in respect of such requests.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the prosecution of Bengt Bolin under Sweden's extra-territorial jurisdiction for child sex offences; and what plans he has to introduce equivalent extra-territorial laws in the United Kingdom. [2578]

Mr. Maclean: We have not yet received all the information we need from the Swedish authorities to make a full assessment of whether the evidence used in the Bolin case would have satisfied the normal requirements of a United Kingdom court.

However, if a British national had committed a similar offence abroad we, unlike the Swedes who do not extradite their nationals, would have been able to return him to stand trial in the place where he was alleged to have offended. We believe that extradition in these cases is a more appropriate response, and we have no current plans to extend our jurisdiction to enable us to deal in this country with offences committed abroad. We do, however, keep this matter under review.

Entry Clearances

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications to enter the United Kingdom for temporary purposes have been made in each year since 1992; how many have been refused; and if he will list the refusal rate for each year expressed as a percentage of the whole. [2835]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is given in the following table.

Applications for entry clearance for temporary purposes, United Kingdom 1992–94

Numbers and percentages

	1992	1993	1994
New applications	903,020	955,440	1,086,940
Granted[1]	803,520	861,810	980,600
Initial refusals	67,830	60,100	64,420
Initial refusal rate[2]	7.8 per cent.	6.5 per cent.	6.2 per cent.

[1] Includes granted initially and granted on appeal.
[2] Calculated as the number of initial refusals as a proportion of total decisions.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the time taken for claims to be processed under the criminal injuries compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement. [3144]

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board does not record centrally fully comprehensive information about the time taken to process applications. However, some information about the time taken for the board to reach decisions on cases and the time taken to resolve hearings is given at paragraphs 3.12 and 4.14 of the board's 30th annual report (CM 2849), copies of which are held in the Library.

This shows that the board's performance in processing cases has been improving. But as we have made clear, we believe that a scheme which is based on common law damages is inherently incapable of providing the level of service which claimants are entitled to expect. That is why we plan to introduce, in April 1996, the new tariff-based scheme provided for in the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act 1995. The new scheme should be easier to understand, simpler to administer and claimants should get their money more quickly.

Channel Islands

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the matters discussed and decisions taken at the meeting held on 17 November with political representatives and officials of the Channel Islands states and what further plans exist for future meetings. [2733]

Mr. Kirkhope: The meeting on 17 November was one in a regular series held at the Home Office in which United Kingdom Government officials brief political representatives, Crown officers and officials of the Channel Islands and Isle of Man on international developments of particular interest to the islands' authorities.

The meeting discussed recent and prospective developments in the European Union, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the World Trade Organisation, the International Labour Organisation, the Energy Charter Treaty, the external frontiers convention, identity cards and the transport and disposal of radioactive waste. At the islands' request, a further meeting, to provide additional briefing on the latter issue, is currently being arranged for early January.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles (a) received a police caution and (b) have been prosecuted for a criminal offence by region for each year since 1979. [2499]

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1979, 1984, 1989, 1992, 1993 and 1994 is given in the tables. The provision of data for other years would involve disproportionate costs.

[1] A number of indictable offences were reclassified as summary on October 1988 following the Criminal Justice Act 1988.
[2] Improvements in the data collection methods used by the Metropolitan Police have lead to increases in the numbers proceeded against in 1992 and 1993.
[3] Missing data for South Wales lead to a small decrease in the number of summary offences recorded.

Community Policing

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on community policing in rural areas. [2649]

Mr. Maclean: Police operations in rural areas are a matter for individual chief officers of police. The Government encourage a partnership approach to policing, and we are aware of a number of successful local initiatives in rural areas, including the farm watch and horse watch schemes, which involve a close partnership between the police and rural communities. In addition, the Government have introduced the parish constable scheme which is being taken up in many rural areas.

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sentenced and (b) remand prisoners were held at Doncaster prison on the 17th day of each of the last 12 months. [2397]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many (a) sentenced and (b) remand prisoners were held at Doncaster prison on the 17th day of each of the last twelve months.

The information requested is given in the table.

Number of sentenced and remand prisoners held at Her Majesty's Prison Doncaster during the last 12 months

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of (a) the number of prison places that will be available by 1 January 1996 and (b) the number of convicted and remand prisoners being held by that date. [1681]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 29 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prison places that will be available by 1 January 1996 and the estimated number of convicted and remand prisoners being held by that date.

The Certified Normal Accommodation available for use in prisons in England and Wales on 23 November 1995 was 51,328. Approximately 140 additional places are expected to be available, following modernisation and refurbishment, by 1 January 1996.

The latest short-term projection (produced in October) indicates that the prison population at the end of December 1995 will be around 50,000, due to the seasonal downturn at the end of the year. Remand prisoners are assumed to be just over 10,000, sentenced prisoners around 39,000 and non-criminal prisoners around 600.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that Premier Prison Services Ltd. recognises trade unions in managing Doncaster prison; and if he will make a statement. [2396]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about trade union recognition at Doncaster prison.

Whether or not a trade union is recognised at a contracted out prison is a matter for the contractor. The contractor at Doncaster prison, Premier Prison Services Ltd., has decided not to recognise a trade union to represent staff.

Doncaster prison has a fully constituted Works' Council which represents all the staff at the prison.

Prison Service

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the management of the Prison Service. [1699]

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. and learned Friend made a statement on 16 October 1995 about the report by General Sir John Learmont which made a number of recommendations about the management of the Prison Service. He has undertaken to come back to the House with a full response to those recommendations in due course. He will also take into account the results of consultation within the Prison Service on the recommendations of the senior management review.

Prison Costs

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) by what amount he expects the cost of prisons to exceed the amount budgeted for 1995–96; [1685]

(2) what is his current estimate of the total cost of holding prisoners for 1996–97, and what was his previous estimate. [1695]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 29 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions asking by how much the cost of prison is expected to exceed the amount budgeted for 1995–96 and what is the current estimate of the total cost of holding prisoners for 1996–97, and what was the previous estimate.

The present provision for 1995–96 in Class VIII, Vote 2, Prisons, England and Wales is £1,660,160,000. While the financial requirements of the Prison Service are regularly monitored, it would be premature to estimate what the final requirement will be. A clearer picture of whether additional provision will be required will emerge in February 1996, at the time of the Spring Supplementary Estimates.

An announcement on the provision available for the Prison Service in 1996–97 will be made at the same time as the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget speech on 28 November.

Spending Plans

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his Department's spending plans for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98. [1680]

Mr. Howard: Detailed information for 1995–96 is set out in the supply estimates 1995–96 (HC271-VIII), subsequently amended by the revised estimate (HC465-VIII) and the winter supplementary estimate (HC4-VIII). Copies of these are available in the Library. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced the Government's latest plans for the following years in his statement yesterday.

Sunday Dancing

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to deregulate Sunday dancing. [54]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are considering how to proceed in the light of the reports of the Deregulation Committee and the House of Lords Delegated Powers Scrutiny Committee on our draft Deregulation (Sunday Dancing) Order.

Bull Bars

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give instructions to remove bull bars from all police road cars and passenger transit vans. [2881]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 November 1995]: The equipment fitted to police vehicles is the responsibility of individual chief officers. The police are aware of the concerns about the use of bull bars and in June of this year the Association of Chief Police Officers' Traffic committee invited all chief officers to consider removing bull bars from their vehicles, where so equipped.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many entrants to the United Kingdom have been found guilty of working illegally, how many were fined; how many were subject to a custodial sentence; how many were removed from the United Kingdom; and how many were found not guilty of any charge in each of the last five years. [2759]

Mr. Timothy Kirkhope [holding answer 28 November 1995]: Information is available for 1990–94 on criminal proceedings taken against persons under section 24(1)(b)(ii) of the Immigration Act 1971—failure to observe conditions of leave, excluding overstaying and failure to report to a medical officer—and is given in table 1. Only a small proportion of persons found working in breach of conditions of leave are proceeded against in this way. The vast majority are dealt with under enforcement powers of the act and information on persons removed from the United Kingdom under these powers is given in table 2.

Table 1: Persons prosecuted in magistrates' courts in England and Wales for offences[1] under Section 24(1)(b)(ii) of the Immigration Act 1971, 1990–94

Illegal Employment

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff in his Department are dedicated to detecting illegal employment; where those staff are based; how those staff routinely operate; and to what extent those staff co-operate with the police. [2761]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 28 November 1995]: No staff are dedicated specifically to detecting illegal employment. This task is part of the role performed principally by some 247 operational immigration staff employed at the main immigration service enforcement offices. These are located in London at the immigration service enforcement unit at Status park and at Becket house—with satellites at Stansted and Apex house, Gravesend; and at Gatwick, Manchester and Birmingham airports. Other immigration staff are engaged in enforcement work from time to time throughout the United Kingdom.

Immigration offenders are identified by following up information from a variety of sources. The normal practice is for the information to be checked through official records with a view to ensuring that a named offender is identified before any attempt to locate him or her is made. The only exception to this "named offender" policy is where visits may be made to places of work where there is apparently reliable information that immigration offenders will be found. In these circumstances particular account is taken of whether there is a history of the premises being used by offenders.

The immigration service works closely with the police and an immigration officer will normally be accompanied by a police officer where an arrest may be necessary. In addition, the police will seek the assistance of the immigration service where they identify a possible offender in the course of other police inquiries.

TRANSPORT

Fish Factory Inspections

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign registered fish factory shops were inspected by officials of the Marine Safety Agency in each of the past four years; how many of these were judged to be inadequate; what action was taken against the masters and owners concerned; and if he will make a statement. [2041]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the inspection of foreign registered fish factory ships.

In the financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95, the Marine Safety Agency (MSA) carried out 86 and 189 inspections respectively of foreign registered factory ships. To date in 1995–96, the MSA has undertaken 87 inspections of such ships.

The inspections are carried out throughout the herring and mackerel seasons by a small team of surveyors. A report describing the defects found and the action required to be taken is left with the master. A copy is also sent to the ship's flag state for follow-up action by them. More than 50% of the fish factory ships inspected have deficiencies which would result in detention if the ships were alongside, but the majority of fish factory ships are inspected outside a port where, currently, our powers of detention do not extend. Where factory ships with serious deficiencies have entered ports in the UK, the ship has been detained until the deficiencies have been rectified. The MSA has detained 43 fish factory ships since April 1993.

MUL 16 Minelayer

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of (a) the threat posed to the safety of shipping and (b) the insurance status of the former Swedish minelayer known as the MUL 16 currently in Poole Harbour; [2103]

(2) what steps have been taken to verify the registration and nationality of the MUL 16. [2101]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Rupert Allason, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Questions about the former Swedish minelayer MUL 16.

The ship was detained by surveyors from the Marine Safety Agency on 18 August 1995 at Poole Harbour. It was detained because of inadequate lifesaving, navigational and radio equipment and insufficient manning. The ship will not be allowed to go to sea until the Agency is satisfied that it is safe to do so. A ship of this type and size is not required to carry insurance and we believe no insurance is carried.

You asked what steps have been taken to verify the registration and nationality of the "MUL 16". The MSA has attempted, unsuccessfully, to confirm registry so as to establish which maritime administration, if any, is responsible for the ship. The ship carried no document indicating registry and we believe it to be un-registered. The master claimed that application for UK registry had been made but in fact only a name has been registered and no formal application has been made.

QE II

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what remedial action has been taken following his assessment of the Marine Safety Agency's report on the QE II incident last December. [3608]

Mr. Norris: A report on the QE II incident has been completed by the director of operations and seafarers standards of the Marine Safety Agency. The director's report discloses serious deficiencies in the shore and ship management of the vessel by Cunard; it also identifies failings on the part of the Marine Safety Agency.

On the instructions of the agency's chief executive the following action is being taken with Cunard:

(a) the agency is holding discussions with Cunard's ship and shore management both to ensure that systems are in place to avoid any recurrence of the problems experienced last December and to work towards early certification under the international safety management code;

(b) for the time being agency surveyors will continue a programme of inspections of the QE II.

In addition, following the director's report, the agency's chief executive has instituted more stringent procedures governing the certification of passenger vessels; these will lead to much tighter control over the continuance in service of vessels on which refit work is in progress. The main changes are as follows:

(1) the agency's surveyors have been instructed not to issue a certificate which is subject to conditions until they are satisfied that adequate steps have been taken by the ship's management and crew to apply and to enforce the conditions for the period during which they apply;

(2) if a certificate is issued subject to special conditions, these conditions will be set down in writing and attached to the certificate, and they will be reinforced by written confirmation from the district chief surveyor to the owner or operator;

(3) any special conditions, or an appropriate summary of them, will be displayed alongside the passenger certificate in a public area of the ship;

(4) the agency's surveyors have been instructed that they should issue a full passenger certificate only after the completion of work needed to comply with the certificate, except in minor matters, where the surveyor may issue a certificate if he is satisfied that the work will be completed before the ship sails.

Appropriate action has been taken in respect of the agency officials involved.

The chief executive has also stressed to surveyors the importance of maintaining a close but objective working relationship with shipowners. All the agency's staff have been reminded of the agency rules on the acceptance of hospitality.

The full details of the incident are set out in the MSA director's report, which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Train Protection

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received from the Health and Safety Commission and Railtrack on train protection strategy; and if he will make a statement. [3607]

Sir George Young: The Health and Safety Commission has considered Railtrack's strategy for reducing the incidence of signals passed at danger, buffer stop collisions and overspeeding. Historically, such risks have accounted for less than one third of all casualties in collisions and derailments, and about 3 per cent. of total casualties on the railway, excluding trespassers and suicides.

The Health and Safety Executive is pursuing, as a matter of priority, discussions with Railtrack and British Rail, and others as required, about action to develop and implement the wide range of measures to which they are committed in the train protection strategy. Objectives for reducing the risks in question will again be included in the annual railway group safety plan.

Railtrack and BR are pursuing five initiatives to reduce the incidence of signals passed at danger.

First, nine tenders were received by Railtrack for the development and pilot installation of a new train protection and warning system, and tender evaluation is proceeding to plan. This system is potentially capable of reducing risks arising from signals passed at danger, overspeeding and buffer stop collisions. The TPWS would enhance the existing automatic warning system by adding functions which would, if necessary, apply the brakes automatically on the approach to, or at, certain signals, and which could not be overridden by the driver. Trials of the TPWS will take place in 1996, and the aim is to start wider installation in 1997. The pilot trials and initial operational use will demonstrate the extent to which it is practicable to install the TPWS.

Secondly, the current trial of a driver reminder appliance, to reduce the risk of starting against a red signal, is expected to be completed by the end of this year. Subject to the outcome of the trial, the intention is to assess the fitting of the device to all traction units operating on Railtrack's infrastructure, with a target for complete installation by the end of 1997.

Thirdly, the existing automatic train protection installations on the Great Western and Chiltern lines should be brought into full service next year. Meanwhile, those passenger trains with ATP fitted are being run with a supervisor in support of the driver.

Fourthly, measures to improve braking performance and driver and systems performance continue. The pilot trials of an emergency sanding device to improve rail adhesion are encouraging.

Finally, and in the longer term, the reduction of risk arising from signals passed at danger and overspeeding is expected to come from a new primary control system consisting of radio-based cab signalling. Railtrack has invited tenders for a development contract for such a system as part of the project to modernise the west coast main line.

Copies of the full advice from the HSC and Railtrack, and my response, have been placed in the Library of the House.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the future of the national air traffic services. [3606]

Sir George Young: I have now given approval in principle to a proposal by the chairman and board of the Civil Aviation Authority that their air traffic control operation should be incorporated as a wholly owned subsidiary of the CAA. This would help to clarify accountability and responsibilities and would mean that the directors of the subsidiary board would have the legal duties inherent in Companies Act status. It would achieve a greater degree of separation within the CAA between service provision and regulation and would pave the way for future privatisation, which remains the Government's longer-term objective.

Detailed proposals for establishing the subsidiary by April 1996 are now being developed. In addition, the Civil Aviation Authority will be working with my officials and the Ministry of Defence to ensure that the integrated civil and military air traffic control service currently provided by NATS is fully safeguarded under the new arrangements.

M4

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the status of the M4 junction 4B-8/9 widening scheme under the revised national roads programme; and if he will make a statement. [3501]

Mr. Norris: The scheme is one of a number identified for review to establish whether smaller-scale proposals would meet the objectives. The proposals for new all-purpose trunk roads alongside the M4 put to public consultation will not be pursued. My right hon. Friend is asking the Highways Agency to consider a range of lower-level solutions, including traffic management, and to have early and extensive consultation with local authorities about options.

British Transport Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision is made for the budget of the British Transport police in the current financial year and in each of the next three financial years; and if he will make a statement. [2885]

Mr. Watts: The British Transport police's budget is determined by its police committee. In 1995–96, the BTP revenue budget is £101.2 million and the force will also undertake capital expenditure of some £2.4 million. The revenue budget for 1996–97 has been set at £101.2 million, and it is envisaged that the capital expenditure next year will be the same as this year. No decisions have yet been made on budgets for subsequent years.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has had further discussions with the Home Office about the jurisdiction of the British Transport police; what was discussed; and what was the outcome. [2886]

Mr. Watts: Discussions are continuing between my Department and the Home Office about the jurisdiction of the British Transport police. The Department remains in close touch with the force's senior management over developments.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current manpower of the British Transport police by rank; what it is forecast to be in each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [2888]

Mr. Watts: The strength of the British Transport police was 2,180 officers as at 11 November 1995. Staffing levels by rank were as follows:

Rank	Numbers
Chief constable	1
Deputy chief constable	1
Assistant chief constable	3
Superintendents	21
Chief inspectors	30
Inspectors	127
Sergeants	303
Constables	1,694
Total	2,180

Manpower levels in future will reflect the resources available to the force. The force is currently rationalising the supervisory ranks and, where possible, increasing constable posts.

Great Western Rail Franchise

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the selection of Resurgence Railways as preferred bidder for the Great Western franchise. [2846]

Mr. Watts: No. The franchising director has not announced bidders. He expects to announce the award of the Great Western franchise in December.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising on matters relating to the Great Western rail franchise; what information on the bidding franchise he receives from the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising; and if he will make a statement. [2845]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is briefed regularly by the franchising director on franchising issues including the progress being made towards offering the Great Western franchise to private sector bidders.

"Safer Ships Cleaner Seas"

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the organisations and other interested parties which received and responded to the consultation paper referred to in the second paragraph on page 47 of "Safer Ships Cleaner Seas"; and if he will make a statement; [2043]

(2) what proposals he expects to bring forward in respect of recommendation 77 of the document "Safer Ships Cleaner Seas", Cm 2560, and if he will make a statement. [2042]

Mr. Norris: The consultation paper referred to has not yet been published. It is hoped that this will be possible by around the end of the year. Until the consultation exercise has been carried out, we cannot say what proposals we expect to bring forward.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations contained in the report "Safer Ships Cleaner Seas", Cm 2560, which (a) have been accepted, (b) have been implemented and (c) are awaiting implementation by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [2044]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 16 October, Official Report, column 85.

Departmental Targets

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the published recommended response times within which his Department is expected to reply to letters from the public. [3003]

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport aims to respond to correspondence from the public within a 15-working day period. This target is published in a publicly available leaflet "Serving the Public".

A249

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about progress with construction of the new dual carriageway for the A249 between the M2 and Kingsferry Bridge. [2438]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir Roger Moate, dated 29 November 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will make a statement about progress with construction of the new dual carriageway for the A249 between the M2 and Kingsferry Bridge.

I am afraid that unforeseen ground conditions have meant delays to this scheme. Because of the delay to the contractors programme, laying of the concrete pavement which we had expected to be substantially completed by now has to be suspended over Winter, but work will re-start next Spring when the weather permits. But most of the diversion of statutory undertakers equipment is now complete and good progress is being made on the Key Street Underpass; the earthworks have also been completed. We expect the scheme to be completed later next year.

Rail Users' Consultative Committee

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications for the post of chairman of the Rail Users' Consultative Committee his Department has received; what are the criteria for selection; and when he will announce the appointment. [2125]

Mr. Watts: Some 147 applications for the post of chairman of the Rail Users' Consultative Committee were received in response to the advertisement published in March. An additional 235 applications were received in response to the further advertisement published in September. The advertisements made clear to applicants the criteria needed for the post. An example of the advertisements is held in the House Library. Shortlisted applicants will be interviewed shortly and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to announce the appointment of the new chairman early in 1996.

Pleasure Craft

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce safety regulations relating to leisure craft following the deaths in Lyme bay. [2291]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 November 1995]: The Government have no plans to introduce national legislation for the compulsory regulation or registration of pleasure craft. The national marine safety steering committee concluded that a satisfactory system would be prohibitively difficult to devise and enforce. However, on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, the Health and Safety Commission is currently consulting interested parties on proposed regulations to implement the Activity Centres (Young Persons' Safety) Act 1995. The proposals would introduce a licensing scheme for certain adventure activity providers, including those using canoes and most sailing craft.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Intergovernmental Conference

21. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the deliberations of the reflections group as part of the process leading up to the European intergovernmental conference in 1996. [875]

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave in the House today to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain).

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Foreign Ministers of the other European Union countries about the preparations for the 1996 intergovernmental conference. [863]

Mr. David Davis: I frequently meet my European counterparts to discuss a wide range of topics, including the intergovernmental conference.

BBC World Service

24. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future funding of the BBC World Service. [878]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Swansea, East, Mr. Anderson in the House today.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to change the present three-year funding agreement with the BBC World Service. [2270]

Mr. Hanley: The triennium system for the World Service was instituted 10 years ago to bring it in line with the rest of the BBC. Since then there have been many changes in the management of public sector finances. We are exploring modifications to the system with the World Service. There can be no absolute guarantee of fixed funding for three years for any publicly funded organisation.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the input of satellite technology deployment on the reception quality for the BBC World Service radio transmission funded by his Department; and if he will make a statement of future prospects. [475]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 November 1995]: The world service uses satellites to distribute to its overseas relay stations. Satellites have improved reliability and technical quality. They have enabled World Service programmes to be broadcast by over 900 MW and FM radio stations. A new satellite distribution system, which is being introduced from 1 April 1996, will bring further significant improvements.

For the longer term, the World Service is investigating direct to home satellite transmission to replace shortwave transmissions. This will depend on the development of low-cost receivers and agreement on the co-ordination of frequencies in the broadcast satellite sound bands. It will probably take many years from the introduction of satellite broadcast before there are sufficient receivers in use to allow the ending of shortwave transmissions.

Nuclear Tests

25. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's policy on nuclear testing. [880]

Mr. David Davis: We have no plans to conduct any further nuclear weapon tests. We are actively negotiating for a comprehensive test ban treaty. But it would be wrong for us to criticise the French decision which they believe is necessary to ensure the safety and reliability of their deterrent, and which was taken on the basis of scientific advice.

Nigeria

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sanctions the Government have imposed on the military regime in Nigeria. [882]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary earlier. We have noted calls for the severing of trade links and an oil embargo and continue to consider a range of options with our EU and other partners. Nothing is ruled out but we would wish as far as possible to avoid harming ordinary Nigerians.

28. Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has met representatives of Shell since 10 November to discuss company policy towards Nigeria. [884]

Mr. Hanley: I have a broad-ranging discussion with the chairman of Shell UK, Mr. John Jennings, on 23 November during which Nigeria was discussed. My noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey also met Mr. Jennings on 16 November.

Kashmir Elections

27. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reason he has been given by the Indian Government for the cancellation of elections in Kashmir. [883]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed the situation in the State of Jammu and Kashmir with the Indian Foreign Minister on 21 November. Under the Indian constitution, responsibility for decisions relating to the conduct of elections rests with the independent Indian Election Commission.

India (Prisoners)

29. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the conclusions of an agreement with the Indian Government to enable convicted prisoners to apply for transfer to a prison in their home country. [886]

Mr. Hanley: I raised the prisoner transfer agreement with my opposite number when I visited India last month. Negotiations have now reached an advanced state and I hope that we will sign an agreement in the very near future.

Cyprus

30. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received with regard to the Greek Cypriot application to join the European Union. [887]

Mr. David Davis: This Department is in regular contact with the Government of the Republic of Cyprus and other interested parties on this issue.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British high commissioner or one of his officials will next visit the Karpas area of occupied northern Cyprus. [1778]

Mr. Davis: British high commission officials visit the Karpas every three to four months. The last such visit was on 22 November 1995.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the Republic of Cyprus. [1779]

Mr. Davis: None.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what private discussions with members of the enclaved Greek Cypriot community and visits to their homes and properties take place when a British high commission official visits the Karpas area of the occupied northern Cyprus. [1780]

Mr. David Davis: The nature of such visits varies according to the availability and willingness of inhabitants to meet officials. The last time a British high commission official visited the Karpas he had extensive discussions with Greek Cypriots in Leonarisson, visited the home of a Greek Cypriot near Ayios Trias, and had a full exchange with a Greek Cypriot family in their home near Rizorkarpasso.

Syria

31. Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next hopes to meet the Syrian Foreign Minister to discuss bilateral relations. [888]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary met Foreign Minister Shara'a in Damascus on 8 November and on 27 November in Barcelona, to discuss bilateral relations and the middle east peace process.

European Union Decisions

32. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European counterparts about the need to reform the European Union's decision-making procedures. [889]

Mr. David Davis: I frequently meet my European counterparts to discuss a wide range of topics, including decision-making procedures.

Brazil

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Brazil concerning the rights of the Makuxi people in Ruraima and the expenditure of Group of Seven money. [871]

Mr. David Davis: The Government of Brazil are aware of our concern that the rights of the Makuzi and the other indigenous people of Brazil should be observed and protected. Our embassy in Brasilia keeps in regular touch with the Brazilian authorities and monitors the situation closely. The ODA representative in Brasilia is in regular contact with the Brazilian authorities about the expenditure of G7 money.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the authorities in Brazil about the trials for the murder of agricultural workers' leaders; and if he will make a statement. [881]

Mr. Davis: I believe that the hon. Member is referring to the murders of rural workers in Rio Maria in southern Para in 1991 and 1992. The embassy in Brasilia has remained in regular touch with the Brazilian authorities about these cases and has attended the resulting trials where possible. The sentences for those convicted have ranged from suspended sentence to 50 years imprisonment.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made towards bringing to trial those accused of genocide in Rwanda. [2567]

Mr. Hanley: The international criminal tribunal for Rwanda expects to bring its first indictments shortly. The United Kingdom has played a full part in efforts by the international community to rehabilitate the domestic judicial system in Rwanda.

GCHQ

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 November, Official Report, column 13, what was the value of new equipment investment in GCHQ Culmehead in the financial years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 to date; and if he will make it his policy that such new equipment will be effectively redeployed elsewhere when GCHQ Culmehead closes. [3128]

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 13, when equipment was last ordered for the GCHQ composite tracking station in Culmehead; what was the nature of this equipment; and what will happen to this equipment after the site is closed. [2699]

Mr. Rifkind: It is not Government policy to reveal details of the procurement of equipment used for intelligence purposes. So far as possible, equipment at the composite signals organisation station at Culmehead will be redeployed when the station closes.

Correspondence

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the published recommended response times within which his Department is expected to reply to letters from the public. [2996]

Mr. Hanley: The target for both the diplomatic wing and the ODA is 20 working days.

Middle East

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government are giving to the peace process in the middle east. [876]

Mr Hanley: On his recent visit, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary encouraged the Palestinians and Israelis to maintain progress on the Palestinian track. He also urged Syria and the Israelis to press forward in their negotiations. He encouraged all the countries of the region to support the peace process. In addition, the United Kingdom provides over £83 million in assistance to the Palestinians, and is providing observers for the forthcoming Palestinian elections.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with the United Nations the request of the Libyan Government to hold a trial in the Hague, under a Scottish judge, operating Scottish rules of evidence, of the two Libyan suspects involved in the Lockerbie bombing. [1638]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: No.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of an application for entry clearance in pounds sterling in each of the entry clearance posts overseas. [2840]

Mr. Hanley: Entry clearance application fees are set in pound sterling, are the same worldwide and the equivalent is charged in the appropriate local currency. Details of the current fees are given in the consular fees order 1995 (SI 1995 No. 1617).

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each entry clearance post, how many applications to visit the United Kingdom to (a) attend a funeral and (b) have medical treatment have been made in the last year for which information is available and how many of these applications were refused. [2842]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not available. A total of 1,086,940 applications for temporary admission were received in 1994 but separate records showing the purpose of each visit are not kept.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken to implement the recommendations set out in the report by the independent monitor in respect of the Asylum and Immigration Appeal Act 1993, published in December 1994. [2844]

Mr. Hanley: In her first report as the independent monitor into entry clearance refusals without a right of appeal, Dame Elizabeth Anson made four recommendations.

First, that all applications and re-applications should be accepted and applicants should be told that they have a right to proceed, even where warned of likely failure. Instructions have been issued to posts to implement this recommendation, including a suitable written notification for applicants.

Secondly, posts should be more consistent in their requirements for documentation before an entry clearance application is lodged or an applicant interviewed. We are encouraging greater consistency between posts and encouraging all posts to have a set list of documents required in advance.

Thirdly, the refusal notice should not refer to confidential matters such as political asylum applications by United Kingdom sponsors or others, given that the notice may become a public document with an applicant's consent. Instructions have been issued to posts reminding them of this requirement.

Finally, writing should be legible on all documents on an applicants file. We are encouraging posts to ensure this, particularly the typing of refusal notices. This process is being helped by the spread of word processing equipment at posts.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the average waiting time before an interview is granted at each entry clearance post overseas; and if he will make a statement on the training given to entry clearance officers on interviewing. [2839]

Mr. Hanley: Eighty-six per cent. of all applications are issued within 24 hours of being lodged either on the evidence of the papers or after a short interview. It is not possible to provide a calculation of average waiting times for longer interviews at each post except at disproportionate cost.

Prior to taking up appointment as an entry clearance officer, FCO personnel attend an intensive three-week course run by the immigration and nationality department unit.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been collected in application fees for entry clearance since the introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeal Act 1993; and how much of that total represents fees accepted for applications which were subsequently refused. [2841]

Mr. Hanley: Records of application fees are kept by financial year only. The value of fees collected for applications which were subsequently refused is not separately recorded. The hon. Member may find the following useful:

> Application fees collected for entry clearance applications in the financial year 1993–94 totalled £30.51 million.
> Application fees collected for entry clearance applications in the financial year 1994–95 totalled £32.35 million.
> The number of refusals made at all entry clearance posts overseas during 1993 and 1994 was 143,113.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests to reconsider refusals for entry clearances have been received from right hon. and hon. Members in each year since the introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993. [2843]

Mr. Hanley: This information is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the location of entry clearance posts overseas, detailing for each (a) the number of locally engaged staff, (b) the total number of staff employed, (c) the number of full-time entry clearance managers and (d) the number of interpreters. [2836]

Mr. Hanley: In view of the amount of detail needed to answer this question I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of (a) applications to enter the United Kingdom for temporary purposes and (b) refusals made at each entry clearance post overseas from 26 July 1993 to the last available date for which information is available; and if he will express the number of refusals as a percentage of the whole. [2837]

Mr. Hanley: In the form requested, these figures could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. Details of entry clearance applications for temporary purposes, both granted and refused, are in table 2.1 in the "Control of Immigration Statistics" published by the Home Office for the years 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the time allowed for interviews at each designated entry clearance post overseas. [2838]

Mr. Hanley: As a guide, entry clearance posts are offered the following target times for interviews:

> 3 minutes: for straightforward applications, received at the counter, by post or from a travel agent, resulting in immediate issue.
> 10 minutes: for secondary examination of less straightforward applications.
> 30 minutes: for cases likely to result in refusal.
> 45 minutes: for settlement applications.

In practice, posts achieve timings close to these targets, but a list showing times taken in each post could be compiled only at disproportionate costs.

Invoices

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount owed to those businesses whose invoices were not paid within the agreed credit period or within 30 days in each of the last five years. [1123]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 22 November]: The information available about the amount owed—expressed as a figure and as a percentage of payments as a whole—is set out in the following table:

	1993–94	1994–95	[1]1995–96
FCO (DW)	—	210 (8 per cent.)	243 (8 per cent.)
ODA	26,242 (13 per cent.)	55,356 (13 per cent.)	20,580 (7 per cent.)
Wilton Park	—	1 (5 per cent.)	—
NRI	—	1,460 (4 per cent.)	1,340 (8 per cent.)

[1] To end of October. Most of these invoices have now been paid.

To obtain detailed information about amounts owed in earlier years would incur disproportionate cost.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for peace in the former Yugoslavia. [866]

23. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of talks aimed at a permanent settlement in Bosnia; [877]

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Members to the statement I made in the House on 22 November, Official Report, columns 659-61.

EC Commission Conduct

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what code governs the conduct of staff at the European Commission's office in London. [2793]

Mr. David Davis: The code of conduct is available from the European Commission office at:

No. 8 Storey's Gate

London

SWIP 3AT.

Foreign Assets

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department has seized or frozen personal accounts and assets of members of foreign Governments; what was seized or frozen; and if he will make a statement. [2918]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer given to his previous question on 27 November, Official Report, column 429.

Written Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations have led him to set out the timetable for consultants to complete their tasks set out in the privatisation options study outline requirements; and if he will make a statement. [2433]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The timetable for consultants to complete the study of privatisation options for the Building Research Establishment was set to be demanding but feasible for the completion of a wide-ranging and thorough project. It is in the interests of BRE's customers and staff for any uncertainty about the organisation's future to be kept to as short a period as practicable. All the consultants who were invited to submit tenders were able to comply with the maximum duration specified.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what date he has specified for the return of bids by consultants on the Building Research Establishment privatisation options study. [2408]

Mr. Jones: The bids for the consultants invited to tender for the study of the options for transferring the Building Research Establishment to the private sector were returned by 20 November.

The Department is today appointing P. A. Consulting to carry out the study.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whom he proposes to appoint to the advisory group to which consultants will be expected to report on options for the privatisation of the Building Research Establishment. [2402]

Mr. Jones: The advisory group for the study on the options for transferring the Building Research Establishment to the private sector will be chaired by the deputy secretary housing and construction. The members will include three senior industry representatives, an official representing the Treasury, the chief executive of BRE and the departmental team responsible for the consultancy project.

Executive Agencies (Overseas Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by agency staff (a) the costs of the travel, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned. [2290]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Small Rural Businesses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the timetable for proposals from his Department in respect of small rural businesses; and what joint initiative he proposes in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Industry. [2575]

Mr. Clappison: The White Paper "Rural England" published in October by my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food outlined a number of measures intended to help small businesses in rural areas.

We expect to publish before the end of this year a guide for local planning authorities to promote good practice in planning for rural diversification. In the new year, we will be consulting on proposals for a rural business use class and on a draft revision of planning policy guidance note 7, "The Countryside and the Rural Economy".

In my role as departmental Minister for small businesses, I will continue to work closely with colleagues in other Government Departments, including the Department of Trade and Industry, to ensure that our policies benefit all small firms, including those in rural areas.

Council House Sales (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been raised from the sales of council homes in the City of Durham constituency to date; and how much the City of Durham council has available in capital receipts from these sales. [2496]

Sir Paul Beresford: The total cash receipts from the sale of all council dwellings in the City of Durham between April 1980 and March 1995, as reported by the authority, is almost £37 million. In addition, authority loans of almost £1 million were issued to finance council house sales. At 31 March 1995, the authority had £0.3 million in accumulated usable capital receipts from all assets. The level of outstanding debt of the City of Durham at that date was £49 million.

Rural Homelessness

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent of rural homelessness and the measures he will be introducing to tackle it. [2647]

Mr. Clappison: The data which my Department collects from local authorities about households accepted as statutorily homeless do not differentiate between households from rural and non-rural areas.

The Housing Corporation's approved development programme funds new social housing in rural and non-rural areas. In 1995–96, some 6 per cent. of the corporation's new development programme is providing social housing in rural areas—defined as settlements with a population of 3,000 or less.

My Department has commissioned research into the nature of demand for housing in rural areas. The results are expected in 1996.

Parish Councils

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to devolve more power from local authorities to parish councils and to ensure accountability for parish councils. [2646]

Sir Paul Beresford: The rural White Paper states our intention to legislate for a formal consultative framework between principal and local councils. It also proposes that certain crime prevention powers which principal authorities have under existing legislation should be extended to parish and town councils, and that they should be given additional powers relating to community transport. We are currently consulting interested parties about those proposals.

A consultation paper has proposed regulations which strengthen accounting and audit requirements for the majority of parishes. Like other local authorities, parish and town councils are independent elected bodies, accountable to their electorate, their auditor and, where necessary, to the courts for the conduct of their business.

Rural Regeneration

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with his counterparts across Europe to discuss strategy for a Europe-wide rural regeneration scheme. [2639]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State keeps in regular contact with his European counterparts to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Rural Areas (Essential Services)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department gives to local authorities in relation to safeguarding essential services in sparsely populated rural areas. [2648]

Mr. Clappison: The Department is acutely aware of the need to ensure adequate service provision in sparsely populated rural areas. The Department's standard spending assessment, which calculates the revenue support grant for local authorities, already allows for the additional cost of delivering some services in sparsely populated rural areas.

The rural White Paper "Rural England" recognises that local authorities have a significant impact on the quality of life in rural areas and therefore encourages them to prepare rural strategies that identify local rural needs and develop policies to meet. Guidance and advice is provided by the three countryside agencies sponsored by this Department.

The recently launched rural services checklist which was announced in the rural White Paper encourages service providers to take account of the particular needs of their customers. Prepared in consultation with service providers and circulated to local authorities, it helps service providers meet the various needs of their rural customers.

The Department provides guidance to local authorities on housing strategies, stressing the need for those local authorities with a significant rural population to develop specific rural housing policies as part of their housing programme. The Department also issues guidance to local authorities on the administration of the non domestic rates hardship relief scheme for village shops and post offices. This will be reviewed shortly and further guidance issued.

Environmental Technology Manufacturers

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he will take of the cost to environmental technology manufacturers in terms of lost business and the international competitiveness of the four year revision of all chief inspectors guidance notes and process guidance notes. [3112]

Mr. Clappison: Manufacturers of environmental technology have benefited significantly from the introduction of the systems of integrated pollution control and air pollution control under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

The chief inspector's guidance notes and process guidance notes are produced as part of the process of following developments in technology and techniques for preventing or reducing pollution of the environment required by the Act. They are reviewed at least every four years. The Environmental Industries Commission is consulted as part of this review process.

Homelessness

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people on housing benefit were (a) re-housed by local authorities following eviction by private landlords and (b) moved to a lower category of accommodation by local authorities because of rent arrears, in the last 12 months. [2868]

Mr. Clappison: The data provided by local authorities on homelessness acceptances include information on the main reason for the homeless households' loss of last settled home.

There were some 1,150 households for which local authorities in England accepted responsibility to secure accommodation, under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act, as a result of private sector rent arrears, in the 12 months ending June 1995. It is not known how many of these households were in receipt of housing benefit.

Information is not available in the Department on the numbers of people on housing benefit who were moved to a lower category of accommodation by local authorities because of rent arrears.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve housing facilities for homeless people. [2869]

Mr. Clappison: The latest homelessness statistics collected by my Department from English local authorities show that the number of households in temporary accommodation has been declining since September 1992. The "Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities", to which authorities must by law have regard, makes clear that all temporary accommodation must meet acceptable standards.

Ribble Valley (Pollution)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is taking following Ribble Valley council's recent vote in respect of the inspectorate. [2912]

Mr. Clappison: I regret the council's vote, but HMIP must complete its consultations on health issues before announcing a decision.

Cemfuel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for the use cemfuel of the distinction made by his Department between waste and fuel; and if he will make a statement. [2874]

Mr. Clappison: In so far as cemfuel constitutes waste, the provisions of the hazardous waste incineration directive (94/67/EC) will apply by 30 June 2000, which is the date specified in the directive. In the meantime, HMIP is applying equivalent controls to the use of wastes in cement kilns and waste incinerators.

Waste Regulation Service

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what minimum standards will apply to ensure that the waste regulation service under the new Environment Agency will be delivered locally and to a standard not less than that achieved by the existing waste regulation authorities. [2891]

Mr. Clappison: The agency will have the same statutory responsibilities as the existing authorities for regulating the management of waste so as to prevent pollution of the environment or harm to human health. The Secretary of State will issue guidance to the agency on the discharge of these functions. It is for the Environment Agency to determine its geographical structure in line with its management statement, and reflecting the need for the efficient delivery of all its services. The management statement states that the agency should develop a close, responsive relationship with local communities.

Cement Industry Working Party

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will include in membership of the cement industry working party a person of independent standing to offer advice on pollution limits from industrial processes. [2913]

Mr. Clappison: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution does not use working parties to draft guidance on pollution limits from industrial processes. Consultants are appointed to provide an independent international overview of up-to-date pollution control techniques. This forms the basis for HMIP guidance which is then subjected to wide consultation across a broad spectrum of consultees, many of which are independent of the industry concerned, before publication.

The guidance does not set statutory pollution limits, but provides benchmarks of current best practices within the industrial sector.

Local Government Finance

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what meetings he proposes to hold with representatives of Sheffield city council following the local government settlement statement. [3202]

Mr. Curry: It is open to all authorities, including Sheffield, to request a meeting with Ministers during the consultation period which follows the provisional settlement announcement.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the basis of his calculations of the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1996–97. [3698]

Mr. Curry: The distributable amount of non-domestic rates in England for 1996–97 will be £12,736 million. This is based on non-domestic rate multiplier of 0.449 and includes an allowance of £429 million for an Exchequer payment to the non-domestic rates pool, to compensate for the shortfall which would otherwise occur as a result of regulations to be made under section 58 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to further phase in the effects of the 1995 revaluation on rate bills.

The calculation for 1996–97, and the prior-year figures on which this is based, are set out in the table:

Notes:

1. Item 1: The gross calculated rate yield represents the total value of non-domestic hereditaments on local rating lists times the multiplier. For the years to 1994–95 the yield is the amount recorded in the post-end year (NNDR3) returns. For 1995–96 it is the amount underlying authorities' provisional contributions to the non-domestic rating pool including the prescribed amount for Enterprise zones.
2. Item 1(i)(a): The transitional decrease adjustment includes the estimated amount of rates that will not be recouped locally due to the revised transitional arrangements under the provisions of the Non-Domestic Rating Acts 1992, 1993 and 1994.
3. Item 1(i)(b): The empty property relief adjustments include voids and partially occupied hereditaments. Figures up to 1995–96 are as reported by authorities. The 1996–97 figure includes an allowance for the increase in the gross rates yield.
4. Item 1(i)(c): Charitable rate relief. As for empty property relief.
5. Item 1 (I)(d): Discretionary relief granted to charities, non-profit making organisations and for other reasons. As for charitable rate relief, with a further adjustment to allow for increased relief following the move to take these reliefs outside capping.
6. Item 1(ii)(a) and (b): The allowances for the costs and losses incurred by local authorities in collecting non-domestic rates from ratepayers, including the latest estimates of additional billing an software costs arising from the Non-Domestic Rating Acts.
7. Item 1(ii)(c): City Offset—a preliminary estimate for 1996–97 (£6.5 million of the amount which the City of London will not be required to pay into the non-domestic rating pool on account of the local rate in the City. It is the amount which will be retained by the authority to meet its own expenditure.
8. Item 1(iii)(a): Net adjustment in respect of appeals an other amendments to the rating list affecting liability for previous years rates settled in that year.
9. Item 1(iii)(b): The revisions to contributions line applies only to estimated outturn revisions to the provisional contributions for 1995–96. For earlier years all figures are already based upon the outturn contributions.
10. Item 2: The rateable value of non-domestic hereditaments on the central rating list times the multiplier, and adjusted for appeals and other changes in respect of previous years. The 1996–97 figure is calculated as the estimated rateable value times the multiplier, less the effect of the transitional arrangements.
11. Item 3: The 1996–97 figure for crown properties includes an allowance for the effect of transition.
12. Item 4(a) and (b): The contribution from central government to offset the amount of the Secretary of State's estimate of income foregone arising from the provisions of the Non-Domestic Rating Acts 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2975]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department committed itself to achieving investor in people status in 1992. The Department has recently concluded a wide-ranging review of its structure and ways of working, including a staff attitudes survey, and a target date for obtaining the investor in people award will be linked to progress on its implementation.

Bathing Water, Norfolk

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Norfolk beaches were tested in 1995 for enteroviruses under the EC bathing water directive. [2968]

Mr. Clappison: The National Rivers Authority sampled the following identified bathing waters in Norfolk for enteroviruses during the 1995 bathing season:

Cromer

Great Yarmouth Pier

Great Yarmouth South

Gorleston Beach

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the areas for which urban development corporations have been established since 1979, indicating in each case which are also covered by a unitary local authority. [3383]

Sir Paul Beresford: The urban development corporations and related unitary local authorities, where applicable, are listed in the table.

UDC	Covered by unitary local authority
London Docklands	Yes	Newham, Southwark, Tower Hamlets
Merseyside	Yes	Liverpool, Sefton, Wirral

Nitrate Vulnerable Zones

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what progress has been made on the establishment of action programmes in respect of the proposed nitrate vulnerable zones; and if he will make a statement. [3907]

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Wales and I issued today a consultation document giving details of the action programme to be established under the terms of the EC nitrate directive, and which will apply in nitrate vulnerable zones. It also gives details of the draft regulations which transpose the formal requirements of the nitrate directive into domestic law. This is the latest of several rounds of consultation about implementation of the directive. The document is being sent to farmers in parishes or communities affected by the proposed zones, farmers' representatives, environmental and consumer groups, and to the water industry.

The draft action programme contains measures on use of inorganic fertiliser and organic manure, and on storage of slurry in nitrate vulnerable zones, in accordance with the directive. The proposed measures are those described in the brief outline of the action programme included in the May 1994 consultation document on the boundaries of proposed zones. In developing the measures, we have made use of experience and knowledge gained from other Government initiatives to reduce agricultural nitrate pollution. The measures should bring about reductions in nitrate leaching in vulnerable zones.

I am placing copies of the consultation document in the Library.

DEFENCE

Nigeria (Arms Trade)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the value of the arms trade to Nigeria to the United Kingdom economy since 1993. [2877]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 28 November 1995]: It is not Government policy to reveal details of the value of defence exports by country. Information on the value of exports, by region, is contained in UK defence statistics—a copy of which is in the House Library.

In December 1993, European partners introduced a series of measures against the Nigerian military. All applications for new licences to export defence equipment to Nigeria were reviewed, on a case-by-case basis, with the presumption of denial. On 11 November 1995, the Prime Minister announced a full United Kingdom arms embargo against the Nigerian military and on 20 November, the European Union announced the adoption of a common position on the extension of measures in three areas; including an EU-wide embargo on arms supplies.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2973]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The principles of investors in people are strongly supported by the Ministry of Defence.

Given its size and complexity, the Ministry of Defence has taken a strategic decision to work towards the IIP standard through its management units rather than as a single entity. Over the last 18 months, the Department has put in place management systems which demonstrate its commitment to the good management and development of people and, in September, published its commitment to the principles of the investors in people standard in its personnel policy statement.

Activity in the Department towards the standard is increasing. Two units have achieved recognition as investors in people and a further nine have made a formal commitment to working towards it. We intend to increase the number of units making formal commitments.

Damages Claim (Tornado Aircraft)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 272, what is the amount of the claim presented to Bricom. [3353]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Details relating to the claim are confidential between my Department and Bricom.

Vessel Replacements

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to award a contract for the construction of replacements for HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid. [3448]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We are currently in negotiation with VSEL to replace HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid. The timing of any order will be subject to the satisfactory outcome of these negotiations.

Departmental Property, Somerset

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many empty residential properties for service personnel his Department currently has in (a) Yeovil and its environs and (b) Somerset. [3345]

Mr. Soames: My Department currently owns 53 vacant service families quarters in Yeovil and its environs and an additional 25 elsewhere in Somerset. Of the vacant quarters, 24 at Ilchester are awaiting demolition as part of a larger plan for the redevelopment of the area. The remainder are either already allocated to service families due to move in shortly or form part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available to house entitled service personnel.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many residential properties for service personnel his Department is currently building in Yeovil; [3347]

(2) how many residential properties for service personnel his Department intends to build in Yeovil; [3348]

(3) what is the cost to his Department of the residential properties for service personnel currently being built in Yeovil. [3349]

Mr. Soames: My Department is not currently building any residential properties for service personnel in Yeovil. However, we intend to build 120 properties to accommodate service personnel moving from Portland in late 1997 and 1998. We also plan to demolish 72 substandard properties in Ilchester and replace them with 84 new houses. It is not our practice to give estimated costs as this could prejudice the tendering process which is due to take place early in 1996.

Army (Trained Strength)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the total trained strength of the British Army in April 1996. [3350]

Mr. Soames: The total trained strength of the Army will be some 104,000 at 1 April 1996, based on recent assessments of recruiting and retention rates. This includes Gurkhas, but excludes members of the Royal Irish Regiment (Home Service).

Reservists

Dr. David Clark: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many letters have been sent to reservists in the last two weeks advising them to be prepared for possible full-time deployment within Her Majesty's Forces. [3351]

Mr. Soames: Some 1,322 letters have been sent to members of the Army Reserve and the Regular Army Reserve of Officers inviting them to be called out for service with the implementation force in former Yugoslavia. Members of the Territorial Army have been trawled through the chain of command and those expressing an interest have then been handed a letter giving further information. There is no central record of the number of letters which have been distributed to members of the TA.

Service Housing

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps he intends to take to improve the quality and management of service housing. [3423]

Mr. Portillo: Earlier this year, the Government created a specialist housing division within MoD, the Defence Housing Executive, to undertake the management and maintenance of the married quarters estate on behalf of all three services. That has provided the estate with a unified, professional housing management organisation which we intend should offer a more responsive and efficient housing service to our personnel and their families. There is a great deal to be done in this area, and the executive has some challenging targets to meet. Over 90 per cent. of its budget is already spent on buying maintenance and other services from the private sector. But further improvements in cost-effectiveness are both possible and necessary.

The DHE will continue in its current form, as a unit within MoD, for a guaranteed period of at least three years. That will enable it to focus on the management improvements we expect it to deliver. I pay tribute to the DHE and its chief executive for the progress already made.

Beyond that, the Government have been considering, with financial and other advisers, possibilities for transferring ownership of the married quarters estate to the private sector. I am satisfied that we should take this forward.

The main points of our proposal are that the MoD should transfer the ownership of the married quarters estate in England and Wales to the private sector on a series of very long leases, renting back the accommodation which is needed to meet service housing needs. To that end, we would enter into detailed agreements governing the maximum and minimum levels of MoD occupancy, allowing sufficient flexibility to cater for inevitable uncertainties about our long-term accommodation needs. Several thousand surplus properties would be transferred on a freehold basis immediately—and future surpluses would similarly be returned to the new landlord. Special arrangements would allow the MoD to share in the enhanced value where the subsequent disposal of such properties was particularly successful. The MoD would retain, through the Defence Housing Executive, responsibility for maintenance and the allocation of housing. It is intended to include the bulk of the official service residences in the sale, where it is possible and sensible to do so.

Our fundamental requirement is to be able to provide our services with the housing that they need and deserve. That requirement flows from operational circumstances which demand mobility of service families, and from the imperative to deal fairly with our personnel and their families, upon whose commitment, dedication and forbearance we so heavily rely.

Meeting that requirement, however, is not dependent upon retaining ownership of the married quarters estate. Indeed, it is inappropriate for Government to own a large estate of this kind if they can avoid doing so. As far as possible, I want to place the business of owning married quarters, and disposing of them when they are no longer required, in the private sector, where significant efficiencies can be expected. Accordingly, I have decided to take forward the transfer of the married quarters estate to the private sector.

I am confident that this proposition will meet the services' housing needs, in a manner consistent with operational and security requirements, and will safeguard the welfare and interests of our personnel and their families. We will also be able, if such a transfer is successfully achieved, to fund additional investment in upgrading the housing stock where necessary. Much of the married quarters estate is in good condition, but there are areas where improvements are overdue, and this sale offers the opportunity to put this right more quickly. It also offers the prospect of real progress in dealing with the current empty homes problem. At present some 20 per cent. of our housing stock is unoccupied; even allowing for the unique requirements of service housing, and the particular difficulties associated with the changes and redeployments of recent years, that is unsatisfactory. By involving the dynamism and expertise of the private sector in dealing with surplus properties, I believe we can help to put that right and improve the supply of housing to the public.

I therefore intend to test the market. If a good price is available, the Government will transfer the stock. Such a transfer would depend upon reaching agreement on terms which satisfy the interests of the Services and on a price which properly reflects the public interest.

The Government will in due course publish a preliminary information memorandum, which will set out the proposals in greater detail, and invite interested parties to prequalify for the opportunity to tender for the estate.

Morocco (RAF Deployments)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, numbers and types of aircraft involved, numbers of sorties flown and minimum permitted altitudes, for Royal Air Force deployments to Morocco during (a) 1994 and (b) 1995. [1280]

Mr. Soames: There were no deployments to Morocco in 1994. Between 21 and 28 April 1995, six Tornado GR1 aircraft flew 32 sorties. The minimum permitted altitude was 300 ft above ground level.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements have been reached with the Moroccan Government for low flying training facilities in that country. [1281]

Mr. Soames: In September 1993 the United Kingdom signed an accord on military co-operation with the Kingdom of Morocco. In July 1994 we completed technical arrangements to facilitate bilateral exercises, including exercises involving RAF low flying training in Morocco.

Tornado Training Establishment

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the German and Italian authorities concerning the future of the Tornado tri-national training establishment; and what plans he has to move RAF Tornado training from Cottesmore. [1288]

Mr. Soames: The RAF has regular meetings with its German and Italian counterparts on all issues relating to the Tornado tri-national training establishment.

Former Yugoslavia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the further deployment of British troops to the former Yugoslavia as part of the international peace plan. [2446]

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1995, c. 482–83]: On Monday, 4 December, some 380 British personnel should begin deployment to the former Yugoslavia as our contribution to pre-positioned troops for a NATO peace implementation force. These will include communications, logistics and engineer units together with advance headquarters elements. Their job will be to help prepare for the arrival of the main forces who will follow as soon as possible after the final signature of a peace agreement, the necessary UN Security Council resolution and an agreed balance of forces committed to the implementation force.

SCOTLAND

Agricultural Allowance Schemes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when the beef annual premium was paid to farmers in Scotland in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995; [2805]

(2) when the sheep annual premium was paid to farmers in Scotland in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995; [2808]

(3) when the hill livestock compensatory allowance was paid to farmers in Scotland in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995. [2809]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Payments under the sheep annual premium scheme, the suckler cow premium scheme, the beef special premium scheme, and the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme are made over a considerable period of time, depending on the kind of payment and when eligibility for payment is established. Payments for the scheme years commenced in the months shown in the table.

Scheme	1993	1994	1995
SHPS	October 1992	October 1994	August 1995
SCPS	November 1992	November 1994	October 1995
BSPS	November 1992	December 1994	—
HLCA	February 1993	February 1995	March 1995

Sheep Quota Allocations

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes in respect of the position of those sheep producers refused sheep quota allocations from the developer category of the 1993 national reserve following the decision not to appeal against Mr. Justice McPherson's ruling; and if he will make a statement. [3164]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Sheep producers in the less-favoured area ring fences who had their applications to the developer category of the 1993 national reserve rejected together with those who were deterred from applying will be offered a chance to apply again for assessment under new guidelines. The Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department will write to producers to let them know what action they need to take. The Department is maintaining close consultation with industry representatives in drawing up the revised guidelines.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to extend lottery funding to grant aid individual sporting competitors. [2500]

Mr. Sproat: I am keeping the national lottery distribution arrangements under review.

"Raising the Game"

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the value of the extra resources that the Government are planning to commit to fulfil the pledges contained within "Raising the Game"; and on which vote the cost will fall. [1555]

Mr. Sproat: The Sports Council will be making available an extra £1 million to enable trainee and serving teachers to obtain coaching qualifications and setting up a £2 million challenge fund to promote formal links between clubs and schools. These additional funds will be made available as a result of savings on administration following the restructuring of the Sports Council. Sportsmatch will also be earmarking £1 million of its funding for schools projects. Most significantly, the national lottery provides sport with an unprecedented opportunity to expand its stock of facilities and equipment and provides the means of fulfilling the Government's aim that, by 2000, all young people will have access to quality facilities, including playing fields.

Departmental Targets

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the published recommended response time within which her Department is expected to reply to letters from the public. [3008]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My Department has set a target of 10 working days to reply to letters from the public.

New Palace Yard (Archaeology)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the archaeology being carried out during the current digging within the confines of New Palace Yard. [3106]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1995]: An archaeological excavation in New Palace Yard was completed in 1994 as part of those being undertaken in the vicinity of the Houses of Parliament by the Museum of London archaeology service on behalf of London Underground Ltd.'s Jubilee line extension project. The current Jubilee line extension work in New Palace Yard comprises engineering operations only.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps her Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if she will make a statement. [2988]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage is currently developing a human resource development strategy based on the four key principles required for investors in people accreditation. A staff development adviser was appointed in August this year and she is working closely with the Central London training and enterprise council and a diagnostic study will be carried out to assess the exact requirements to achieve IIP status. As soon as that diagnostic study has been completed, I will be able to give a target date for achievement of the award.

Under-age Gambling

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what research her Department has undertaken into the problems of under-age gambling; and if she will make a statement. [1968]

Mr. Sproat: My Department has not undertaken any research into under-age gambling. I welcome yesterday's announcement by the Director General of the National Lottery about tough new action designed to stamp out under-age lottery sales. As part of this action, Oflot and the lottery operator will also commission research on UK and overseas experience in relation to ticket sales to children.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what grace and favour accommodation in which occupied royal palace is allocated to (a) the private secretary to Her Majesty the Queen, (b) the Keeper of the Privy Purse, (c) the Master of the Household, (d) the Comptroller, the Lord Chamberlain's Office, (e) the Crown Equerry and (f) the Director of the Royal Collection. [2481]

Mr. Sproat: This information is provided on page 33 of the Committee of Public Accounts minutes of evidence for 24 April 1995, which is available in the Library of the House. Some of these officials occupy accommodation on a grace and favour basis as all have statements in their salaries in recognition of their occupying official accommodation.

Undertakings to Indemnify and Contingent Liabilities

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was (a) the number of undertakings given by her under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 during the six-month period ended 30 September 1995 and (b) the amount of value, expressed in sterling, of any contingent liabilities as at the end of that period in respect of such undertakings given by her under that section at any time as remain outstanding at the end of that period. [3910]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information my hon. Friend requests is as follows:

In the six-month period ended 30 September 1995 the following undertakings to indemnify were given by the relevant Departments for items on loan to national and non-national institutions.

	Number
Department of National Heritage	470
Scottish Office Education Department	78
Welsh Office Education Department	37
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	16

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time and outstanding at 30 September 1995 are:

Department of National Heritage	1,975,720,233
Scottish Office Education Department	137,926,172
Welsh Office Education Department	35,201,147
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	4,333,303

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will set out the forecast Exchequer grant for the promotion and support of tourism for 1996–97 and 1997–98, at 1979 prices and expressed per head of population, for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. [2166]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 29 November 1995]: The planned Government grant to the English tourist board and the British Tourist Authority for 1996–97 and 1997–98, expressed in 1979 prices, and per head of population for the countries covered by the boards, is set out in the following table. It is not possible to give figures for other parts of the United Kingdom as I understand that my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland have still to announce the allocation of the overall settlements for their Departments announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 28 November.

	British tourist authority		English tourist board
	£m £ million (1979 prices)	£ Per head population	£m £ million (1979 prices)	£ Per head population

The British Tourist Authority is responsible for marketing Great Britain overseas. The grant per capita for BTA has therefore been calculated using the total population of England, Wales and Scotland.

Greenwich Park

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the recommendations made by the Royal Parks review group in its report on Greenwich park. [3909]

Mr. Sproat: I have now considered the group's report in detail. As with the two previous reviews—on Hyde park and Kensington gardens, and on St. James's, Green and Regent's parks—the review group, chaired by Dame Jennifer Jenkins, examined a wide range of issues relating to the role and management of the park, consulting widely with individuals and interested organisations. The conclusions were discussed at a one-day conference, and were well received. The conference delegates supported the majority of the recommendations, but made a few alternative suggestions.

The group's recommendations focus on the opportunities to provide for changing demands and pressures without losing sight of the park's prime function of providing a green open space, close to the heart of the city, where local residents and tourists alike can enjoy themselves in the open air, amidst examples of London's finest built heritage. We have been looking positively at the group's proposals, and I confirm that I can accept them in principle. I set out the action we have taken, and my proposals for taking matters forward, including the necessary consultations which will have to be carried out before some recommendations can be implemented. The availability of financial resources will of course determine the timing of some.

The principle recommendations of the group are to nominate a world heritage site at Greenwich, and to open up the great axis, leading from the Isle of Dogs across the Thames to the Royal Naval college and the Queen's house, up the park's escarpment to the Wolfe monument, and on to the spire of All Saints church in Blackheath.

I endorse the world heritage site proposal. I have sought preliminary advice from English Heritage, and my Department is pursuing discussions with the London borough of Greenwich, and other interested parties. If all goes well, I hope to put Greenwich forward by the end of this year for inclusion in the United Kingdom's tentative list of world heritage sites, with a view to making a formal nomination by July 1996.

I endorse the proposal to open up the great axis, and my Department will be taking this forward in respect of the Royal Naval college site, in consultation with the relevant parties. The document, inviting expressions of interest in the future use of the Royal Naval college buildings, confirms the Government's wish to see greater public access to this site. The proposal concerning the axis, as it unfolds through the area leading from the Queen's house, up through the park, and as to how a less divisive boundary between the National Maritime museum and park can be achieved, will be the subject of detailed discussion between the two organisations. The Royal Parks agency will commission its landscape architects, in co-operation with the museum, to look at the landscaping issues in detail, including the escarpment, and will put forward recommendations. Consultations will then take place with all concerned.

As in earlier reports, the Jenkins group considered that there was a need to curb traffic and parking, to improve the safety of pedestrians and the atmosphere of the park. They recommended that this could be achieved by banning through traffic, and closing St. Mary's gate, at the north end of the park, and redesigning the layout of Blackheath avenue to create more space for pedestrians. The closure of St. Mary's gate will require discussion with the London borough of Greenwich, the Minister for Transport in London, the Traffic Director for London, and local interested groups. Discussions are in hand, and subject to the outcome, we are thinking of introducing a six month trial ban next year. The Royal Parks Agency will also commission a design study of Blackheath avenue in due course as funds permit.

On the group's recommendations to bring into the park additional areas, from which the public are now excluded, the agency has begun discussions with the London borough of Greenwich about the Old Orchard, and with Thames Water about the reservoir. The agency has commissioned a feasibility study of how best to use the former nursery site, with a view to retaining two glasshouses and the contractor's yard, and incorporating the remainder into the deer enclosure. Any programme of works resulting from the study would not begin until full consultations had taken place. The works would be phased over a number of years, and would be dependant on available financial resources.

The group made a number of other recommendations to improve the ambience of the park, including improvements in planting and pruning, banning dogs from sports areas, and continuing with the current sports provision. These have already been implemented. Work is about to begin on improving surfaces in the children's playground, and costs will be met from existing budgets. The costs of other recommendations, to improve paths and upgrade benches, will be met from current and future maintenance budgets of the Royal Parks Agency. For proposals such as the provision of shelters and cycle tracks, the agency will be seeking sponsorship and private finance.

The report also refers to the prime meridian in the context of the millennium. I accept the recommendation that there should be no new millennium building in the park, but welcome the suggestion of marking the meridian line in some way. The Royal Parks Agency will be inviting proposals of how this might be achieved.

The full cost of implementing the recommendations is not yet known, as further studies are required in many instances. It will also be necessary to consider the royal parks requirements alongside other demands on my Department's budget.

I am most grateful for the contribution and time Dame Jennifer and her group have given to the review, and for their comprehensive report and constructive recommendations. I look forward to their final report on the remaining royal parks—Richmond and Bushy.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will announce the television licence fees which will take effect from 1 April 1996. [3911]

Mr. Sproat: The Government announced on 4 November 1993, Official Report, columns 309–10, that they had decided to link increases in the television licence fee to the retail prices index for the remaining three years of the BBC's current royal charter.

Licence fee increases are based on the annual RPI figure as at the previous September, in the same way as pensions and other state benefits. Application of the RPI figure of 3.9 per cent. for the year September 1995 to the current unrounded licence fees produces new rounded totals of £90.00 for a colour licence and £30.00 for a black and white licence. The necessary regulations to bring these fees into force will be laid before the House in due course.

Scratchcards

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will estimate the number of national lottery outlets selling scratchcards to under 16-year-olds. [1970]

Mr. Sproat: My Department cannot estimate the number of national lottery outlets selling scratchcards to under 16-year-olds. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has, under section 11 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, issued a direction to the Director General of the National Lottery, that no licence should be granted which authorises the promotion of any lottery, which does not allow for sufficient controls to prevent persons who have not attained the age of 16 from participating. I have therefore asked the director general to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

BBC World Service

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the performance of the BBC World Service against its remit to explain, inform and educate those outside the United Kingdom of the affairs and nature of the United Kingdom. [3169]

Mr. Hanley: We have regular discussions with the World Service about its performance. The World Service is aware that informing overseas listeners about the United Kingdom is an important aspect of its remit. The content of programmes is a matter for the World Service.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to require the BBC World Service to broadcast the "Today", "The World at One", "PM" and "The World Tonight" programmes. [3170]

Mr. Hanley: It is for the BBC World Service to decide which domestic BBC programmes are suitable for international broadcasting.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to meet the managing director of the BBC World Service to discuss funding proposals for the next triennium. [3163]

Mr. Hanley: Detailed discussions on the next triennium will begin early next year.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2976]

Mr. Hanley: The personnel and security command of the diplomatic wing is committed to seeking investor in people recognition and expects to be able to do so in April 1996. We regard this as a pilot project which, if successful, might lead to investor in people status later being sought by other commands and divisions of the diplomatic wing.

The aid wing is committed to achieving investor in people status, has completed initial diagnostic work and engaged an adviser.

Indonesia

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the pro-democracy groups in Indonesia which have been funded in the last five years; and how much each group received. [3145]

Mr. Hanley: We provide no funding to any Indonesian political group, but we maintain contact with a range of groups in Indonesia through our embassy in Jakarta and have invited on occasion representatives to visit the UK under our sponsored visit scheme.

Angola

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process in Angola. [1494]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 29 November 1995]: We are encouraged that, a year after the signing of the Lusaka protocol, the ceasefire in Angola continues to hold and that the quartering of UNITA troops has now begun. However, there is still much to be achieved before the Lusaka protocol is implemented in full. We urge both parties to fulfil their obligations.

Nigeria

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 November, Official Report, column 71, on what dates in 1995 Ahmed Abdullahi, a senior member of the Nigerian Provisional Ruling Council, was in Britain.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 29 November 1995]: General Abdullahi made two visits to the UK in 1995. In February, he was given, exceptionally, a visa on compassionate grounds to receive urgent medical attention. He made a further private visit in September, having acquired a visa through misrepresentation. Procedures at the visa section of our high commission in Lagos have been reviewed.

World Conference on Women

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which aspects of the Beijing programme of action he is prioritising. [2911]

Mrs. Gillan: I have been asked to reply.

The Government attach a great deal of importance to the world conference on women, and we are fully committed to implementation of the "Platform for Action", its outcome document.

I have outlined a plan for implementation which includes a short, accessible public report of the conference, which will be available shortly; an invitation to non-governmental organisations to submit their views on priorities for implementation by 1 February 1996; and a report on progress on implementation one year after the conference. We await the outcome of the consultation exercise before setting any specific priorities for implementation.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken by the international community and the Rwanda Government to improve conditions at Kigali prison. [2556]

Mr. Hanley: The international community provides food and medical treatment for prisoners in Kigali and other prisons in Rwanda. Over 500 women and children have already been transferred from Kigali prison to new facilities or to a new wing within the Kigali prison, built with international funding and the co-operation of the Rwandan Government. Adolescent prisoners and 1,500 adult prisoners are to be transferred to new facilities shortly.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Land Registration

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the estimated cost to public funds of moving to mandatory land registration within five years. [2246]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of HM Land Registry Executive Agency is best placed to provide the answer. I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 30 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning the estimated cost to public funds of moving to mandatory land registration within five years.

Land Registration is compulsory on sale throughout England and Wales for all conveyances and transfers of freehold land and all leases for a term of more than 21 years. Over 15.7 million titles are already registered and it is estimated that, under existing legislative provisions, approximately 18 million titles will be registered by the year 2000.

If the remaining unregistered titles were to be brought onto the public land register within five years by new, mandatory, compulsory registration provisions there would be no direct cost to public funds as the Land Registry is required to cover all its expenditures from fees paid by those who use its services. However, under existing legislation, public authorities, in their capacity as landowners, would be required to pay fees for registering their titles.

In September, a joint report by the Law Commission and the Land Registry (Law Com No 235; Cm 2950) was published which proposes extending the circumstances in which a disposition of unregistered land must be completed by registration, thereby bringing forward the time when all land in England and Wales would be brought onto the public land register. The report also recommends the introduction of a new fee structure to enable reduced fees to be charged to encourage voluntary registration. A draft Bill to give effect to these (and other) recommendations is included in the report and a suitable opportunity is being sought to bring this forward for consideration by Parliament.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which countries in the European Union limit the acreage of land to which any one owner may have title. [2245]

Mr. Evans: The question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of HM Land Registry Executive Agency is best placed to provide the answer. I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 30 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning which countries in the European Union place limitations on the acreage of land that may be held by any one owner. In England and Wales registration of title is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Land Registry. The Land Registration Acts place no such limitation on ownership. Since the repeal by the Charities Act 1960 of the old Mortmain and Charitable Uses Acts, the general law of England and Wales has imposed no such limitation on ownership. I am not aware of any restriction elsewhere in the European Union.

Mental Incapacity

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to publish a response to the Law Commission's report on mental incapacity. [2138]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government set up an interdepartmental working group, chaired by the Lord Chancellor's Department, to consider the Law Commission report on mental incapacity. The group was asked to produce an initial report for consideration by Ministers by 1 September 1995, and has met this timetable. Ministers are now considering the report of the working group together with that of the Law Commission. The Government will make an announcement of their initial view on the Law Commission's report once Ministers have had the opportunity to consider the implications of the proposals.

State Papers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those countries of the European Union that do not release state papers until a specified period has elapsed; and if he will give the period in each case. [2720]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The definition of "state papers" differs throughout the European Union, as do the periods for which such papers are withheld. The different provisions in the 12 then member states are set out in chapter 4 of the 1994 report of the group of experts on the co-ordination of archives, "Archives in the European Union". Copies of the report are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Executive Agencies (Overseas Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by agency staff (a) the costs of the travel, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned. [2285]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Court Service became an executive agency on 3 April 1995. Hence, for the financial year in question, the Lord Chancellor was responsible for three executive agencies—the Public Trust Office, Her Majesty Land Registry and the Public Record Office. The question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executives of those agencies are best placed to provide the answer and I have accordingly asked them to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question requesting details in respect of overseas travel within the last financial year. I can provide the following information:

(a) In the year 1994/95 the total expenditure on overseas travel by Land Registry staff was £8,084.

(b) The countries visited were Switzerland, France, Belgium and South Africa.

(c) The posts held by the six staff concerned were: Chief Land Registrar (Switzerland), Solicitor to HM Land Registry (France), Director of Information Technology and Head of Services, Computer Services (Belgium), Director of Corporate Services and Head of Development & Support, Computer Services (South Africa)

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 22 November 1995, regarding the cost of overseas travel made by agency staff in the last financial year, including the posts held by the staff concerned and the countries visited.

There was no overseas travel on official business by any member of the Public Trust Office during 1994/95.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about (a) the costs of travel, (b) the countries visited, and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned, in respect of overseas travel by agency staff for the last financial year.

The answers are:

(a) £7708.

(b) Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, The Netherlands, Portugal, Russia, and the United States of America.

(c) The Keeper of Public Records; the Director of Corporate Services; the Manager of the NewPRO programme and two of his staff; the Head of Preservation Services; a Government Services Inspection and Documentation Officer; the Publications Manager; a Reader Services Department Team Leader and the Head of Map Section.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2979]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The constituent parts of my Department are approaching the investor in people initiative separately.

The Court Service, established as an agency in April this year, is committed in principle to achieving the investor in people standard within the lifetime of the current corporate plan, that is by April 1998. A scoping study, begun earlier this year, will shortly recommend to the chief executive when the process should begin and what the time scale should be for the action plan and assessment phase. The chief executive will make a public announcement once these decisions have been taken.

The Public Trust Office began to work towards investor in people in April this year and has completed the diagnostic stage to determine the readiness of the office for assessment against the standard; surveys and interviews of staff have been carried out and the findings were recently presented to the management board. A decision has been taken to pursue a commitment to achieve accreditation for the PTO by April 1997 and the action plan is being drawn up.

The headquarters of my Department began active consideration of the investor in people initiative in the summer and is currently examining the options for completing the diagnostic stage of the process, with a provisional target date of April next year. Decisions on a target date for committing to IIP and on timing of an action plan will follow thereafter.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2980]

The Attorney-General: The Law Officers' departments are committed to the principles of the investor in people initiative. The Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office are actively considering the options for the implementation of IIP. The CPS is pursuing with a training and enterprise council the possibility of a pilot exercise in one of its offices. The Treasury Solicitor's department envisages taking a decision to work towards the IIP standard after 1 April 1996, once it has assumed agency status. The Government Property Lawyers has already decided to seek IIP accreditation: much of the groundwork has been carried out and the agency is in contact with a TEC with a view to making progress in the near future. The legal secretariat to the Law Officers is a small office, the staff of which are almost all on loan from other Departments, and thus there are no immediate plans to implement IIP in its case.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Onshore Oil Licensing

Mr. Ainger: to ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he received from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and the Countryside Council for Wales before inviting applications from oil companies for blocks in watery areas in the latest onshore oil licensing round. [2854]

Mr. Page: Previous practice regarding onshore licensing has been to offer all unlicensed onshore areas, including watery areas, in each licensing round. Watery areas have attracted very few applications, none in the last two rounds, and environmental and other bodies interested in these areas were consulted only after applications had been received and on a case-by-case basis. It was felt that to consult over areas that were—on the basis of previous experience—unlikely to be the subject of applications would place an unnecessary burden on the organisations consulted. For this reason, neither the Joint Nature Conservation Committee nor the Countryside Council for Wales was asked to advise on the watery areas before the invitation to apply for licences in the seventh round of onshore licensing was announced.

After the announcement, it became clear that a number of companies were interested in exploring in the watery areas and the views of the JNCC, and CCW were therefore sought. Consultation with these bodies over blocks on offer in the seventh round continues.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the organisations that have communicated their objection or concern about the latest onshore oil licensing round covering watery areas. [2851]

Mr. Page: The DTI consulted over 90 organisations following the offer of watery areas in the seventh onshore oil and gas licensing round. Those on the following list have either objected or expressed varying degrees of concern. Applications were received for three of the areas, the Solway firth, the Minches and the Ribble estuary, and 12 of the organisations listed have expressed an interest in these.

Organisations that have communicated their objections or concern about the latest onshore licensing round covering watery areas.

Departmental Targets

Ms Armstrong: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the published recommended response times within which his Department is expected to reply to letters from the public. [3004]

Mr. Lang: The published targets for letters for ministerial reply are as follows:

Substantive reply sent within 10 working days: 77 per cent.

Substantive reply sent within one calendar month: 98 per cent.

For other letters, individual management units and agencies within the Department are free to set their own targets and performance measures as part of the MINIS process. There is no recommended standard, but all performance measures and targets are monitored and reviewed annually in MINIS to ensure that they are challenging and will lead to continued improvements in output and performance.

More detailed information about individual management units, performance measures, including timeliness targets for responding to correspondence from the public are published annually in the Department's MINIS documents. Copies of MINIS 94 and MINIS 95 are available in the Library of the House. Agencies' targets are also published in their annual reports.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2984]

Mr. Lang: The Department announced its formal commitment to working towards investor in people accreditation in May 1994. This was followed by a full diagnosis of the relevant procedures and attitudes within the Department. A draft action plan was produced which is now being extended to cover staff who joined the DTI from the Cabinet Office and the former Employment Department in the latest machinery of Government changes. The revised plan will be submitted to Central London training and enterprise council for approval within the next few weeks, although the key changes in procedures are already being put in place. A trial IIP assessment is planned for the summer of 1996. The timing of the final assessment will be decided in the light of the results of the trial.

"Realising our Potential" Awards

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications were received for responsive mode (non-ROPAS) grants by the (a) the Medical Research Council, (b) the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, (c) the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, (d) the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council and (e) the Economic and Social Research Council in 1994–95; how many were turned down because of ineligibility; how many were x-rated; and how many were (i) accepted and (ii) rejected. [2991]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information requested is set out in the following tables. Because of the differing ways the research councils organise their grant schemes it is not possible to provide all the information precisely as requested.

Particular attention should be paid to the explanatory notes.

1994 responsive mode[1] (non-ROPA) grants
Analysis of applications and awards by Research Council

Research Council	Number of applications	Number x- rated	Number of awards	Number of ineligible	Number rejected
BBSRC	1,107	775	313	—	794

PPARC[1]	412	353	294	0	118

1995 responsive mode[1] (non-ROPA) grants
Analysis of applications and awards by Research Council

Research Council	Number of applications	Number x-rated	Number of awards	Number of ineligible	Number rejected
BBSRC	1,121	879	253	—	868
EPSRC[1]	1,036	—	417	—	619
ESRC	834	522	225	18	609
MRC	987	790	217	—	770
NERC	524	346	101	—	423
PPARC[1]	259	221	181	0	78

[1]For EPSRC and PPARC readily available grants data does not distinguish responsive and non-responsive proposals. The figures shown are therefore for all non-ROPA grants.

BBSRC: the council does not record the number of ineligible applications received.

ESRC: 'ineligible' applications include those rejected by the office as unsuitable for processing on technical grounds (outside Council's remit or insufficiently specified). Also includes applications withdrawn by candidates, the ESRC have supplied two sets of figures for the 'rejected' category; the figures shown are for all applications not funded which includes unfunded alphas;

the alternative figures are 363 (1994) and 312 (1995) for all non-alpha applications not funded which is the category which ESRC regards as 'reject'.

EPSRC: the new EPSRC grants system began on 1 January 1995. The period 1 April 1994 to September 1994 was spent dealing with applications made to SERC and Phase 1 ROPAs. This was followed by what was essentially an inter-regnum during which responsive applications received and grants awarded were insignificant and mainly related to maintaining support for existing groups; the EPSRC does not have closing dates for its grant scheme; readily available grants data does not distinguish responsive and non-responsive proposals;

the data relates to responsive mode proposals (excluding ROPAs) received and fully considered between 1 January and 31 July 1995.

MRC: the figures relate to the 1 August 1994–31 July 1995 grant round;

MRC do not keep statistics on ineligible applications.

NERC: figures are for academic years 1993–94 and 1994–95; ineligible applications are sifted out at an early stage and are therefore not sent for peer review or considered by the Research Grants Training and Awards Committee. As a consequence no applications fall into the ineligible category.

PPARC: PPARC have been unable to identify responsive and non-responsive grants separately; figures therefore reflect the whole of the grants portfolio;

it is not yet possible to provide a full picture for '1995' because PPARC is part way through a grants round.

Royal Cornish Consols United Tin Mines Cost Book Co.

Mr. Harris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on factors leading to the Department of Trade and Industry discharging the receiver appointed to investigate the activities of the Royal Cornish Consols United Tin Mines Cost Book Co.; and if he will publish the receiver's report. [2580]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The receiver was appointed by the High Court as part of injunctive proceedings designed principally to bring an end to a misconceived tax avoidance scheme. That receiver has obtained his release from the court, and has not produced any report for this Department.

Steel

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action has been taken during the last six months to reduce state aid for steel production within the EC. [2962]

Mr. Eggar: The Commission ordered the repayment of illegal state aid to a steel producer in Germany. Formerly, state-aided companies in Spain, Portugal and Italy have been privatised. At the November 1995 Industry Council, the Commission, while proposing an exceptional derogation for Irish steel, reaffirmed its commitment to avoid putting forward any future requests for derogation from the steel aid rules. The UK Steel Subsidies Monitoring Committee has played a part in maintaining the pressure to end steel subsidies in Europe.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current order book of the British steel industry; and what it was in each of the last three years. [2964]

Mr. Eggar: Information on orders outstanding is not available. Figures of total orders booked in each of the last four years are in the table.

Life Funds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what approaches have been received from Australian Mutual Providence regarding the proposed release of surplus moneys from the life funds; and what reasons have been given for such a proposal. [3354]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department does not comment on its contacts with individual companies.

The Department's view on the balance between policyholders' and shareholders' interests in the long-term funds of life insurance companies was set out by my predecessor my hon. Friend the Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans) in his reply to the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) on 24 February 1995, Official Report, columns 362–63.

Gas Measurement Branch

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the annual income of the Gas Engineering Meters and Quality Laboratory arising from (a) fees, (b) charges and (c) fines; what was total number of staff employed (i) part time and (ii) full time; and what contribution his Department made towards the annual running costs in the past three years. [3255]

Mr. Eggar: I assume that this question refers to the work of the gas measurement branch of the oil and gas division of my Department. The income from fees and charges for Gas Act 1986 work in the three financial years, 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1995 is as follows:

Financial year	Fees £	Charges £
1992–93	2,292,549	1,001,715
1993–94	1,718,997	912,304
1994–95	1,518,188	967,804

There was no income from fines. Any fines would be paid into the magistrates court in respect of any criminal proceedings.

The number of staff in post in April of the relevant years carrying out Gas Act work is also as follows:

Staff in post	Part time	Full time
1992	4	62
1993	3	61
1994	2	58
1995	4	46

Apart from total expenditure over the three years of about £6,000 for Gas Act statutory work for which there was no power to make a charge, all of the gas measurement branch's annual running costs were recovered by relevant fees and charges.

Medicine Sales

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what information he has as the basis of the investigation currently being undertaken by the Office of Fair Trading into the resale price maintenance of medicines; and if he will make a statement; [3013]

(2) what estimate he has made as to the likely savings to the National Health Service from the abolition of the resale price maintenance scheme for medicines; [3015]

(3) if he will support the abolition of the retail price maintenance of medicines. [3019]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1995]: In 1970, the restrictive practices court exempted medicaments from the general prohibition on resale price maintenance. The exemption can only be ended by the court. The Director General of Fair Trading has a duty to monitor and regularly review existing goods exempted from the prohibition. The Office of Fair Trading's current review is to establish whether there is a prima facie evidence of material change in the relevant circumstances since the exemption was granted. If the DGFT concluded that there was a material change of circumstances he could apply to the court to seek leave for review of the exemption. It would be premature to speculate about the DGFT's conclusions.

Asbestosis

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many coal miners and former coal miners diagnosed to be suffering from asbestosis since 1983 have received a payment under the 1974 pneumoconiosis compensation scheme. [2726]

Mr. Page [holding answer 28 November 1995]: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Business Links (Rural Areas)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many business links in rural areas will be operating by the end of 1995; and if he will indicate their location by county. [2643]

Mr. Page: Most business links have within their boundaries a variety of locations—urban, suburban and rural. It is not possible therefore to enumerate business links operating only in rural areas. By the end of 1995 business link services will be available to around 85 per cent. of all VAT-registered companies in England.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 30 November. [1653]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 30 November. [1654]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister what steps his office is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2972]

The Prime Minister: For this purpose, my Office is part of the Cabinet Office. In February 1993, the Cabinet Office registered commitment to achieve investor in people status. The formal commitment relates only to the Office of Public Service part of the Cabinet Office and the establishment officer's group. However, the whole Department is participating in the process of change and will share in the benefits. An action plan for the Department was produced following consultation with staff and was formally accepted by the Central London training and enterprise council in July 1995. Work is in hand to take forward the action required to bring the Department to the necessary standard. The Department is seeking to achieve accreditation by the end of 1996.

Crown Act 1707

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to bring forward legislation to amend the Succession to the Crown Act 1707. [3378]

The Prime Minister: No.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charter Mark

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many firms have withdrawn from the charter mark award scheme; and if he will make a statement. [2908]

Mr. Willetts: Only one. British Gas withdrew from the charter mark scheme earlier this month when its charter mark was under review.

Executive Agencies (Overseas Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by agency staff (a) the costs of the travel, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned. [2284]

Mr. Willetts: As this concerns a purely operational matter, I have asked the chief executives of the agencies concerned to write direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. N. Edwards to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 22 November 1995:

There has been no overseas travel on behalf of the Chessington Computer Centre by any of its staff during the last financial year.

Letter from Craig Muir to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1995:

"To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by agency staff (a) the costs of the travel, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff concerned."

(a) £579.34

(b) United States of America

(c) Director of Business Development.

Letter from Mike Devereau to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 November 1995:

I have been asked to reply, in respect of the Central Office of Information, to your question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about overseas travel.

COI staff of all grades make many visits in the course of providing services to other departments from whom costs are recovered. For example radio technicians support overseas visits by senior ministers, film marketing specialists attend sales conferences and managers travel with touring exhibitions.

The cost in 1994–95 was £65,078. The countries visited were:

Letter from S. H. F. Hickey to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 November 1995:

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has asked me to reply for the Civil Service College to your Question about overseas travel by Agency staff.

The cost of overseas travel and subsistence in the 1994/95 financial year was £92,078. The countries visited are listed in the annex to this letter. The staff concerned were myself, Business Group Directors and teaching and consultancy staff.

There was some travel to international conferences, often to present papers, but the large majority of the expenditure was in connection with fee-earning business, primarily in the area of promulgating the UK experience of public sector reform. For example, we have had major contracts for supporting public sector reform in Southern Africa and Eastern Europe.

Letter from E. C. McCloy to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 24 November 1995:

Your written question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has been referred for me to reply on behalf of this Agency.

During 1994/95 there was no expenditure on travel overseas by any member of Agency staff.

Civil Servants (Contact with the Opposition)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the guidelines and timings for meetings of permanent secretaries with Opposition Front Bench Members, and for the undertaking of contingency work by civil servants in preparation for a change of Government; and if he will make a statement. [3268]

Mr. Heseltine: The convention has been that, by authority of the Prime Minister, towards the end of a Parliament or when a general election has been called, Opposition parties may arrange, with the authority of their party leaders and through the head of the civil service, contacts with senior civil servants. These arrangements are designed to allow briefing on factual questions on departmental organisational changes which Opposition parties have in mind or which may result from Opposition party policies. Any exchanges would be confidential. Following the last general election, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the leader of the Opposition that he would be content to authorise confidential exchanges between senior civil servants and Opposition spokesmen from January 1996.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Nigeria

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the involvement of the Crown Agents in the export of military, security or police equipment to Nigeria since June 1993; and if he will make a statement. [2074]

Mr. Hanley: Crown Agents has had no involvement in procurement of military equipment for Nigeria. Under contractual arrangements entered into before 1993, a Crown Agents subsidiary company acted as shipping agent for one company exporting military equipment under licences granted before EU measures were imposed in December 1993. This involvement ceased in January 1995.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the police training for Nigerian police officers in the United Kingdom and Nigeria since 1990 has involved (a) instruction in crowd control techniques and (b) the use of firearms. [2479]

Mr. Hanley: Training has not included instruction in either crowd techniques or the use of firearms.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which towns or cities in Nigeria United Kingdom personnel have visited to provide training to Nigerian police forces in each year since 1990. [2480]

Mr. Hanley: United Kingdom personnel provided training in Jos between 1991 and 1993, and in Enugu between 1993 and 1995.

Children

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain reports from Her Majesty's ambassadors stationed in countries currently or recently suffering from war and armed conflict on the degree to which children have been pressed into direct military action; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on aid or expedient support for Governments permitting children to be trained for military service. [2734]

Mr. Hanley: We receive regular reports from our representatives overseas. As part of our good governance policy, we always take account of a Government's level and use of military expenditure when deciding our allocations of bilateral aid.

We take every opportunity to urge those countries which have ratified the UN convention on the rights of the child to comply fully with the relevant sections of article 38 of the convention, which deals with children in armed conflict.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what programmes or projects are currently supported by the overseas aid budget to establish post-conflict trauma aftercare for children in developing countries which have suffered from civil war or other armed conflict. [2736]

Mr. Hanley: The most effective interventions to assist children who have been affected by conflict are those which seek to provide a normal, stable environment for child development. We adopt a holistic approach to post-conflict situations through normal economic and social rehabilitation activities, supplemented by more targeted programmes, such as child tracing or family reunification. For this purpose, we have supported Save the Children programmes in Gaza and the west bank, Liberia, Rwanda, Tanzania and Zaire, Serbia and Montenegro, Red Cross services in Angola and UNICEF programmes in Burundi and the former Yugoslavia.

Sri Lanka

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received about the delivery of humanitarian aid to Tamil refugees in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [2515]

Mr. Hanley: Food and non-food relief is reaching the displaced people in the north, including the Jaffna peninsula. The main requirement is for shelter materials, household goods and the provision of safe drinking water. We continue to channel our relief and rehabilitation support through the non-governmental organisation CARE, Oxfam and Save the Children, and through the International Committee of the Red Cross. All these organisations operate in co-ordination with the Government of Sri Lanka.

TREASURY

Investors in People

Mr. Buyers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2986]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury made a formal commitment to work towards achieving the investor in people standard in April 19[illegible], when it agreed a departmental action plan with the Central London training and enterprise council. A mid-term assessment of the Department's progress is planned for early 1996, the outcome of which will determine the target date for accreditation.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those in his Department who have authority to issue public interest immunity certificates; how many such certificates have been issued in each of the last five years; and what were the main reasons for them. [1427]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A claim to public interest immunity relating to departmental records or information is normally made by the appropriate Minister, or in the case of the Inland Revenue and HM Customs and Excise by the chairman. No PII certificates have been signed by Treasury Ministers during the last five years.

In order to protect in proceedings confidential information provided by taxpayers about their personal affairs or the identity of informers, the chairman of the Inland Revenue may swear affidavits, rather than sign PII certificates, claiming on public interest grounds that disclosure of documents should not be made. As far as can be ascertained, one such affidavit has been signed in the last five years—in 1991—and was for use in civil proceedings.

The chairman of Customs and Excise also claims PII by affidavit and not by certificate. There have been three affidavits in the last five years—one each in 1992, 1994 and 1995. Each was used in civil proceedings in order to protect informant and intelligence information.

Value Added Tax (Blood Products)

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what consultations his Department held with the Department of Health in respect of the imposition of value added tax on the recombinant factor VIII product Kogenate; [3130]

(2) on how many occasions he has considered the imposition of value added tax on the recombinant factor VIII product, Kogenate; what was his decision in each case; and if he will make a statement. [3129]

Mr. Heatcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise advised Bayer in September 1994 that Kogenate could be relieved from VAT as it appeared to fall within the exemption for human blood or products derived from human blood. Customs subsequently discovered that other supplies were treating recombinant products as outside this exemption and to ensure equity reviewed the position. On the basis of scientific advice from the Department of Health, Customs ruled that since these products were not derived from human blood, they were taxable at the standard rate of VAT. Bayer was advised of the new ruling on 25 September 1995.

This ruling brings the VAT liability of these products into line both with that applied in other member states under the EC sixth VAT directive and with that of other drugs and therapeutic products. Plasma-derived human factor VIII remains exempt from VAT.

Departmental Targets

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the published recommended response times within which his Department is expected to reply to letters from the public. [3002]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The recommended response time within which the Department is expected to reply to letters from the public is between 10 to 15 working days.

Low-risk Ports of Entry

Mr. Cann: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those ports of entry into the United Kingdom which are regarded as low risk by the Customs and Excise. [3186]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All ports of entry into the United Kingdom are subject to Customs controls. It would not be in the public interest to disclose the Customs assessments of risk arising at individual ports.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials with responsibility for the private finance initiative formerly within his Department have been transferred to (a) the Department of Health or (b) the NHS Executive. [3093]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 28 November 1995]: No permanent officials have been transferred from Her Majesty's Treasury to the Department of Health or NHS Executive to work on PFI matters; however one member of staff seconded to Her Majesty's Treasury is working on private finance matters within the NHS executive.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown of the numbers of pensioners refused cold weather payments by region over the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [1092]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency and he will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for a breakdown of the number of pensioners refused cold weather payments by region over the past five years.

Cold Weather Payments are paid to people receiving Income Support whose benefit includes a disability or pensioner premium or who have a child under aged 5 in their family. Payments are made automatically to those eligible without the need for a claim form to be completed.

I hope you find this helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of invalidity benefit were (a) medically examined and found (i) capable of work, (ii) capable of alternative work and (iii) capable of undertaking their usual occupation in each of the quarters ending December 1994 and March 1995 and (b) without examination were found (i) capable of work, (ii) capable of alternative work and (iii) capable of undertaking their usual occupation in each of the quarters ending December 1994 and March 1995. [1748]

Mr. Burt [holding answer Friday 24 November]: The administration of incapacity benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 29 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many claimants of invalidity benefit were (a) medically examined and found (i) capable of work, (ii) capable of alternative work and (iii) capable of undertaking their usual occupation in each of the quarters ending December 1994 and March 1995 and (b) without examination were found (i) capable of work, (ii) capable of alternative work and (iii) capable of undertaking their usual occupation in each of the quarters ending December 1994 and March 1995.

Information is not available in the format requested. The figures below are for the number of medical opinions given, following examination, that a customer is capable of work. Such opinions are not given without a medical examination. Decisions as to whether or not a person is found capable of work for benefit purposes is made by independent adjudication officers.

Number of opinions given following examination

Number of opinions given following examination	December 1994	March 1995
Capable of work
Alternative work	26,534	26,150
Usual occupation	4,269	4,096
Total	30,803	30,246

Incapacity Benefit replaced Invalidity Benefit from April 1995. For Incapacity Benefit purposes, the examining doctor does not give any opinion on a person's capacity to work, rather an assessment is carried out of the individual's functional limitations and restrictions which is then scored by the adjudication officer, along with the customer's own assessment, in order to reach a decision on capacity for work.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the Child Support Agency's assessed case load was not paying regular maintenance immediately prior to take on by the agency. [2066]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell [holding answer Monday 27 November 1995]: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 29 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency assessed caseload.

In the first year of the Agency it was estimated that just under 60 per cent. of all the cases where we were not already receiving maintenance. This proportion has increased to an estimated 77 per cent since April 1994.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many absentee fathers the Child Support Agency has traced since its introduction. [2217]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member. [2217]

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 29 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many absentee fathers the Child Support Agency has traced since its introduction.

The number of absent parents traced by the Child Support Agency from its launch until 30 September 1995 is as follows:

1993/94: 28,240

1994/95: 49,632

1995/96: 25,164

Total to date: 103,036

You may wish to know that this information is already available in the Child Support Agency's statistical information which is placed monthly in the Library.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money has been recovered as a result of intervention by the Child Support Agency. [2220]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 29 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about money recovered by the Child Support Agency.

Between April 1993 and September 1995 the Agency has been involved in the payment of new maintenance arising from child support assessments of over £330 million.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the running costs of the Child Support Agency during each year since 1992–93. [2218]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 29 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the running costs of the Child Support Agency during each year since 1992/93.

From launch on 5 April 1993, the Agency's net cost of operations during 1993/94 was £139 million as published in the annual accounts on 28 November 1994. The net cost of operations during 1994/95 was £192 million as published in the annual accounts on 18 July 1995. Expenditure statements in both annual reports are prepared on an accruals basis. I hope this is helpful.

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been made in each region for industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema up to 31 October; how many were (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful; and on what grounds. [3023]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. The available information is set out in the tables.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2983]

Mr. Burt: The Department is committed to the principles of investor in people and uses the IIP standards to underpin all personnel policies throughout the Department. Individual business units are, however, free to approach the achievement of the standard in ways which best meet their business needs. The Benefits Agency began the process of IIP accreditation as early as 1992 and 20 business units have subsequently received accreditation with a further 113 units at different stages of achievement. The Contributions Agency, War Pensions Agency and Information Technology Services Agency are at various stages of the process with a view to obtaining accreditation during 1996 and 1997. DSS headquarters aim to audit their personnel management practices against the IIP standard during 1996 and the Child Support Agency will encourage individual units to seek accreditation.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Budgets

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the percentage of each shire county's education budget which is held back for central administration together with the amount of money this represents per school pupil. [2570]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows the percentage of each county's general schools budget reserved centrally in 1995–96 for management and administration, and the amount of money per pupil which this represents.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the cost of vouchers under the nursery scheme will be deducted from local authority standard spending assessments. [3375]

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the local education authorities which are piloting the nursery voucher scheme will be subject to the standard spending assessment clawback during the period of the pilot. [3447]

Mr. Robin Squire: In both phase 1 and full implementation of the nursery education voucher scheme, vouchers will be funded through a combination of new money and deduction from participating local authorities' standard spending assessments. The deduction will be based on the number of four-year-olds in nursery education places in the maintained sector in a base year, taking into account termly variations in attendance.

Local Education Authority SSASs

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the education component of standard spending assessments per pupil (a) between five and 10 years, and (b) between 11 and 15 years, expressed in cash and constant prices, in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97, in each local education authority and on average; and what was the percentage change in each local education authority and on average between 1992–93 and the latest year for which figures are available. [3111]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following tables set out the information requested. Some care is needed in drawing conclusions about the percentage change in funding between 1992–93 and 1996–97, since the figures take no account of local education authorities' loss of responsibility for certain functions, notably the careers service and school inspections.

The figures for the secondary sector are also affected by the use from 1995–96 of September in place of January as the date on which pupils are counted for SSA purposes, and above all, by the relative shift in LEA expenditure from the secondary to the primary and nursery sectors, which is subsequently reflected in the SSA distribution.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps her Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if she will make a statement. [2974]

Mr. Paice: The former Department of Employment and the former Department of Education were committed to becoming investors in people. The Department for Education and Employment is determined to achieve that status. An action plan is in preparation building on the work undertaken by the former Departments. No target date has yet been set.

Training

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amount was spent on training by her Department per unemployed person for each year since 1989–90 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms. [2969]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Amount £	Real Terms[1] £
1985–86	140	220
1986–87	180	280
1987–88	220	320
1988–89	480	660
1989–90	980	1,260
1990–91	950	1,130
1991–92	560	630
1992–93	430	460
1993–94	500	520

[1] 1995–96 prices.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes will be made to the funding system for youth training and modern apprenticeships in 1996–97; and what plans she has to publish the results of the recent consultation on future funding arrangements. [3908]

Mr. Paice: No major changes are planned to the funding system for youth training and modern apprenticeships in 1996–97. A summary of the responses to the consultation document on future funding arrangements for youth training and modern apprenticeships was published on 24 November. Copies have been placed in the Library today.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 445, if she will list for, respectively (a) Manchester grammar school (b) Manchester high school for girls and (c) William Hulme's grammar school, Manchester, how much has been spent by the Government on the assisted places scheme in total, (i) up to but not including the latest year and (ii) in the latest available year; and what additional money will be made available in the planned expansion of the scheme. [3269]

Mrs. Gillan: Information is readily available only for the last five years. The amounts spent on assisted places at each of the three Manchester schools cited for the academic years 1990–91 to 1994–95, and estimates for the latest academic year 1995–96, are given in the following table. Provision for the academic year 1996–97, when the scheme's expansion is planned to begin, and for succeeding years will be announced in due course.

WALES

Student Hardship Funds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students made applications for hardship funds in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; and if he will make a statement. [2658]

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 29 November 1995, Official Report, column 755.

Small Firms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning small firms; and if he will make a statement. [2665]

Mr. Richards: The second competitiveness White Paper called "Forging Ahead", published in May 1995, outlined a programme of measures to assist the growth and competitiveness of the small firms sector.

The Welsh Office works with local authorities, training and enterprise councils, the development agencies and local enterprise agencies in providing a range of services for small businesses in Wales. We have established eight business development consortia—business connect—to streamline the assistance available and to make it easily accessible through a single low-cost, all-Wales telephone number. This service will be operational from 15 January 1996.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the powers transferred from non-departmental public bodies to local government in each of the last three years. [2916]

Mr. Hague: In October 1994, the responsibility for operating mid-Wales development grant; development of rural initiative, venture and enterprise (DRIVE) grant; rural (buildings) conversion grant and community enterprise grant was transferred to local authorities. In addition, from 1 April 1995 local authorities were given direct control of funds for social and economic development, previously provided in the form of grant assistance by the Development Board for Rural Wales under section 4.1. (d)(i) and (ii) of the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976.

Surplus Explosives (Disposal)

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what records his Department holds regarding surplus stocks of conventional explosives brought from RAF Great Orton to Royal Ordnance establishments in Wales for disposal between 1946 to 1948; what current environmental monitoring is conducted by his Department on these disposal sites; and if he will list the locations of all land and off-shore sites in and around Wales used for such disposal. [3100]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office has no records or responsibilities in this area.

New Dwellings

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each district council area the number of houses built (a) by district councils, (b) by housing associations, (c) by other public bodies and (d) in total for each of the last three available years. [1852]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is given in the following table. Only one dwelling classified as "other public bodies" was built in the period: this has been included with the local authority number for Rhondda for 1992.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2987]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office has been working towards the investor in people standard since December 1992. Following a period of assessment and planning, an action plan was submitted to investors in people UK in April 1995. The Department will seek accreditation when the action plan has been implemented.

Inspector Days (Allocation)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inspector days allotted to Welsh primary schools in the academic year 1994–95 involved (a) inspectors who had teaching experience in primary schools and (b) inspectors who had teaching experience in secondary schools; and what was the total number of inspector days allotted. [3110]

Mr. Richards: Operational issues relating to school inspections are a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales. I have passed this inquiry to him: he will respond to the hon. Member in due course.

Urban Development Programmes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what dates urban development programmes prepared by the Welsh Development Agency were submitted to (a) the European Commission and (b) the single programme document monitoring committees for industrial south Wales and rural Wales. [3385]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Development Agency's urban development programmes are not submitted to either the European Commission or the single programme document monitoring committees for industrial south Wales and rural Wales.

Freight Terminals

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency in respect of the European freight multi-modal development for south Wales; when he anticipates approving the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [3387]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) on 8 November, Official Report, columns 923–24.

Police Authority Funding

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his proposals for police authority revenue spending in 1996–97. [3912]

Mr. Hague: I propose to make £331.4 million available from total standard spending in Wales to fund police services in 1996–97. This sum comprises £165.2 million in cash-limited police grant to be paid by the Home Secretary and £166.3 million in standard spending assessments. It represents an overall increase of £15.7 million, or 5 per cent. on 1995–96. The sums for each police authority are set out in the following table:

£ million

	Police grant	Standard spending assessment	Total
Dyfed Powys	24.2	24.3	48.5
Gwent	31.3	31.4	62.7
North Wales	34.6	34.7	69.3
South Wales	75.1	75.8	150.9

These figures include a transfer of around £10.5 million for the transfer of responsibility for policing the Rhymney valley area from south Wales to Gwent police authority.

The Welsh Office is today writing to each of the police authorities in Wales to consult them on their provisional standard spending assessments for 1996–97. This figure may alter slightly if the balance of the police funding formula as between English and Welsh police authorities changes as a result of consultation.

It is essential that police authorities budget wisely and do not impose an unreasonable burden on council taxpayers. I therefore propose provisional capping principles to inform their budget decisions. Police authorities would not be capped if their budget requirements for 1996–97 were:

less than 12.5 per cent above the sum of the authority's standard spending assessment and police grant; and did not exceed their 1995–96 base budget by more than the greater of the sum of the increases in their standard spending assessment and police grant of 3.5 per cent.

I will make my final decisions on capping principles in the light of budgets set by police authorities.

I am still considering my capping proposals for the new unitary authorities in Wales. I propose to announce provisional capping principles and standard spending assessments for these authorities in mid-December.

Copies of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of support for Welsh local authority revenue spending he proposes to provide through aggregate external finance for 1996–97. [3913]

Mr. Hague: On 28 November, Official Report, column 600, I announced that I propose to set total standard spending in Wales for 1996–97 at £2,867.3 million; and central Government support for that level of spending through aggregate external fiance at £2,517.4 million.

Within aggregate external finance, I propose to make available £1,792 million in revenue support grant; £459 million in distributable non-domestic rates; £237.4 million in specific grants; and £29 million to damp council tax increases arising from the disaggregation of the county and district councils' 1995–96 standard spending assessments and budgets to unitary authorities. The threshold for damping will be set at 0 per cent.

My Department has today written to the Welsh local authority associations to consult them on my proposals for revenue support grant in 1996–97.

Copies of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons convicted of crimes connected with (a) republican and (b) loyalist violence have been transferred to prisons in Northern Ireland from (i) Great Britain and (ii) the Republic of Ireland; how many have been transferred from prisons in Northern Ireland to prisons in (i) Great Britain and (ii) the Republic of Ireland since 1 September 1994; and on what dates the transfers took place. [2373]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for this subject has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Mr. William Ross, dated 30 November 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to this Parliamentary Question.

Since 1 September 1994 14 persons convicted of crimes connected with Republican violence have been transferred to prisons in Northern Ireland from Great Britain. In 9 cases the transfer was permanent and in 5 cases it was temporary. No person convicted of crimes connected with Loyalist violence has requested transfer. No persons convicted of Republican or Loyalist violence have been transferred from Northern Ireland to Great Britain or the Republic of Ireland.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish the policy statement produced by the Northern Ireland committee on drug misuse; and what proposals are planned based on that policy. [2137]

Sir John Wheeler: Arrangements are in hand for publication of the policy statement of the Northern Ireland committee on drug misuse before Christmas. I have established a new top level central co-ordinating group for action against drugs, of which I am chairman. The group comprises senior representatives from Northern Ireland Government Departments, the medical profession and the Royal Ulster Constabulary. It will ensure that each Government Department in Northern Ireland is playing its full part to combat the drugs problem and that their action plans are driven forward in a co-ordinated manner and build the recommendations of the policy statement.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions since 1 September 1994 representations have been made to Her Majesty's Government for the early release of convicts serving sentences in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain for crimes related to (i) republican violence and (ii) loyalist violence (1) by Ministers of the Government of the Irish Republic directly, (2) via the Maryfield secretariat, (3) by the SDLP or (4) by Sinn Fein; and what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government regarding the early release of loyalist convicts held in prisons in the Irish Republic for such crimes. [2371]

Sir John Wheeler: It is not possible to provide an answer in the form requested and I can answer only for representations received by or on behalf of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Prison issues have been discussed at each meeting of the inter-governmental conference, of which there have been five since 1 September 1994. No representations have been received from the Irish side of the Anglo-Irish secretariat. Representations have been made on three occasions by members of the SDLP with regard to particular cases concerning those convicted of crimes of republican and loyalist violence. No representations have been made by Sinn Fein.
Her Majesty's Government have made no representations to the Irish Government on the subject of the early release of prisoners.

Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons convicted of crimes connected with (a) republican and (b) loyalist violence have been given early release or have had their remission extended in the period from 1 September 1994 to the latest available date. [2374]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Mr. William Ross dated 28 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question regarding the number of persons convicted of crimes connected with Republican and Loyalist violence who have been given early release or had their remission extended.

Since 17 November 85 releases have taken place under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Remission of Sentences) Act 1995. However, although the Northern Ireland Prison Service holds information regarding the parliamentary affiliation of individual offenders, the nature of the original offence could only be identified at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people convicted of crimes related to (a) republican and (b) loyalist violence have been given early release from prisons in the Republic of Ireland since 1 September 1994; and how many persons convicted of each such category of crimes are still serving sentences in the Irish Republic. [2372]

Sir John Wheeler: As this is a matter for the Government of the Republic of Ireland I am unable to supply the answer.

Executive Agencies (Overseas Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by staff of the agency (a) the cost, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff involved. [2361]

Sir John Wheeler: Overseas travel by staff in executive agencies during 1994–95 was as follows:

1994–95 Overseas travel

Agency	(a) Cost £	(b) Countries visited	(c) Posts held by staff involved
Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland	15,000	Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, USA, Netherlands	Chief Executive, Deputy Director, Head of Computer System, Senior Mapping and Charting Officer, Computer Systems
Valuation and Lands Agency	1,483	Netherlands	Senior Valuation Assistant, 5 Valuation Assistants
Social Security Agency	5,503	Germany and USA	Director of Local Operations, Director of Central Operations, Unit Manager of Paid Order Unit
Training and Employment Agency	46,537	Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Singapore and USA	Chief Executive, 2 Senior Instructional Officers, 2 Higher Instructional Officers, 3 Instructional Officers, Training Services Manager, 3 Grade 5s, 4 Grade 7s, 3 Deputy Principals, Staff Officer, Development Manager

Pigs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pigs were slaughtered in each pig factory in Northern Ireland; for each factory how many were imported in each week from the period beginning 3 September until the latest available date; and what were the equivalent figures for the same period last year. [2370]

Mr. Ancram: I am unable to provide the information requested as it is not appropriate to disclose information on the performance of individual pig slaughterhouses.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when they started the process, when they expect to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2981]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland civil service has been committed to the achievement of IIP status since 1992.

Individual Departments and agencies in the Northern Ireland civil service have developed their own strategies and timetables for pushing this initiative forward and plans are at an advanced stage to make formal commitments to achieving the IIP standard. To date, the Training and Employment Agency and the internal audit group of the Department of Health and Social Services have achieved investor in people status.

Social Fund

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to make a further allocation of funds to the discretionary social fund budget in the current financial year. [3773]

Mr. Moss: I am very pleased to announce that the Northern Ireland social fund discretionary budget for 1995–96 will be increased by a total of £1.5 million as a result of better than expected loan recoveries by the Social Security Agency. This will increase the original allocation to a total of £33.34 million.

This increase in the social fund budget will ensure that more people receive help and that the fund continues to play an important role in targeting resources on those most in need.

Details of the revised budget have been placed in the Library.

Chief Electoral Officer (Report)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the report of the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland for 1994–95. [3774]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Chief Electoral Officer's report was laid before the House yesterday. Copies are available from the Library.

HEALTH

Medical Devices

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with what frequency the premises of manufacturers of medical devices are visited and inspected by the Medical Services Agency. [2392]

Mr. Horam: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Medical Devices Agency under its chief executive Mr. Alan Kent. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alan Kent to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 30 November 1995:

I am writing to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the frequency at which the premises of manufacturers of medical devices are visited and inspected by the Medical Devices Agency.

Manufacturers of medical devices applying for inclusion in the Register of Approved Manufacturers are assessed before registration. The aim is to carry out further assessments every 3 years when the company seeks re-registration. Additional special audits or visits may be conducted when there is reason to suspect that the company no longer satisfies the registration requirements.

New Statutory requirements, harmonised within the European Union through Directives, are replacing progressively the voluntary Manufacturer Registration Scheme (MRS). Since 1 January 1995 some manufacturers have chosen to use independent certification bodies, that is Notified Bodies, to assess their quality assurance systems and confirm they are complying with the requirement of the Directives. Through mutual recognition agreements, MDA has been able to use Notified Body assessments as a basis of registration to the MRS. The Manufacturer Registration Scheme will be discontinued in mid-1998 when the regulations supporting the Directives are fully implemented.

I hope the above is helpful.

Prescription List

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will put the Smith and Nephew four layer bandage for leg ulcers on the prescription list. [2682]

Mr. Malone: No. This method of treatment may already be provided cost effectively to patients in clinics and at home through the community health services.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Tom Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has as to the number of fatalities caused by the abuse of anabolic steroids and other performance-enhancing drugs. [2503]

Mr. Bowis: The number of deaths involving anabolic steroids and stimulants was 22 in 1992, the latest year for which figures are available.

NHS Administrative Costs

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the administrative costs of NHS as a percentage of the total NHS budget in each year since 1989. [3120]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table. Changes over the roles and responsibilities of family practitioner committees, family health services authorities, district health authorities, and regional health authorities, and the transfer of functions to national health service trusts, mean that the figures are not strictly comparable.

Adminstration costs as a percentage of total revenue expenditure for the NHS in England

	Administration expenditure £000	Total revenue expenditure £000	Percentage of revenue expenditure on administration
1989–90	730,500	18,275,603	4.0
1990–91	929,947	20,161,643	4.6
1991–92	846,467	23,292,462	3.6
1992–93	962,862	27,468,802	3.5
1993–94	1,136,415	28,927,234	3.9
1994–95	1,180,479	29,457,618	4.0

1. The figures for 1994–95 are provisional.
2. RHA and DHA costs are those reported in the accounts as "Authority administration and purchasing expenses". This includes capital charges after 1991–92. FPC/FHSA administration costs are those reported in the annual accounts as revenue administration costs and represent that part of total expenditure which is not medical, dental, ophthalmic or pharmaceutical.

Norplant

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Hoechst Roussel Ltd. sought to make it a condition of its licence to supply Norplant in the United Kingdom that its use be restricted to specially trained and experienced doctors. [3127]

Mr. Malone: Applications from companies for licences are confidential under section 18 of the Medicines Act.

Training of doctors in the use of a device such as a Norplant implant is a matter for the professional bodies, in this case the Royal Colleges of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and of General Practitioners.

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists has recently introduced a scheme for recognition of training in the insertion and removal of Norplant and this includes the company training scheme. The product information is therefore being changed to add to the recommendation that Norplant is inserted and removed by a trained health professional.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to revoke the licence granted to Hoechst Roussel Ltd. to supply Norplant in the United Kingdom. [3126]

Mr. Malone: The licensing authority has no such plans. Like all hormonal contraceptives, Norplant has hormone-related side effects, which may lead to a need to discontinue this method of contraception. The product literature informs doctors and patients of these known side effects.

Factor 8

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will provide extra funds to all hospital trusts to cover the extra cost of recombinant factor 8 products, incurred as a result of the imposition of value added tax on these products. [3134]

(2) what measure he is taking to ensure that hospital trusts buy and continue to buy the new recombinant factor 8 products in the wake of the imposition of value added tax on these products. [3131]

Mr. Horam: It is for clinicians to decide what products are used in the light of available resources and the needs of individual patients. Factor 8 derived from human plasma is used for the majority of patients and is exempt from value added tax.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations has he made to the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding his decision to impose value added tax on recombinant factor 8 products. [3132]

Mr. Horam: The question of whether value added tax is chargeable on factor 8 products turns on whether they are derived from human blood. My Department has provided technical advice to HM Customs and Excise on that issue.

Hormone Replacement Therapy

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to remove the requirement of a separate prescription charge for each drug contained in HRT preparations; and if he will make a statement. [2862]

Mr. Malone: None.

The regulations require a charge to be paid for each quantity of a drug supplied. This includes each quantity of medicine in duopacks such as HRT which are packed in this way for the convenience of the patient and for the manufacturer.

Maternity Services, East London

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost per delivery of the maternity services in the City and east London district at (a) Homerton hospital, (b) Newham general hospital and (c) Royal hospitals trust. [2863]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Access Committee for England

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the level of funding the Access Committee for England has received from his Department for each year since 1989 in 1995 prices. [2914]

Mr. Bowis: The Access Committee for England has received the following levels of grant under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, at 1995 prices, since 1989.

1989–90:	£119,159
1990–91:	£149,670
1991–92:	£155,277
1992–93:	£172,252
1993–94:	£156,832
1994–95:	£134,875

Accident and Emergency Trauma and Orthopaedic Service, Leeds

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has made to the review of accident and emergency trauma and orthopaedic service in Leeds. [3123]

Mr. Horam: This review of services was undertaken by independent experts commissioned by the Leeds review task force. I understand a draft report prepared by the task force will be circulated widely for comment in the near future.

Doctors Recruitment

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received alleging difficulty in recruiting and retaining general practitioners to (a) general practices and (b) hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [3141]

Mr. Malone: We have received representations through informal discussions with the profession and the national health service on pockets of difficulty within general practice and on particular difficulties in filling some hospital specialty posts. We are addressing these through improved work force planning.

NHS Organ Donor Register

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further plans he has to advertise the existence of the national organ donor scheme. [3133]

Mr. Horam: Since we launched the national health service organ donor register in October 1994 over 2¼ million people have applied to join, of which some 800,000 had joined when applying for a driving licence or registering with a general practitioner. We have been monitoring the effectiveness of the different ways used to encourage people to join and plan further publicity initiatives for early in the new year.

Efficiency Scrutiny

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work on efficiency scrutiny he announced on 11 October; who is conducting the efficiency scrutiny; and what are its terms of reference. [3340]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. the Secretary of State has asked Mr. Jim Hammond, chief executive of East Gloucestershire national health service trust, to lead the efficiency scrutiny into the burdens of paperwork in NHS trusts and health authorities. The terms of reference for the team are:

a. to identify achievable reductions in the administrative burden associated with the work of NHS trusts and health authorities and recommend action which will eliminate unnecessary bureaucracy, consistent with the objective of improving the efficiency, effectiveness and responsiveness of patient services;

b. to examine the traffic in guidance and information that flows between the Department of Health—including the NHS Executive and regional health authorities—and trusts and health authorities, and make recommendations that will reduce the burden on the NHS while retaining the information necessary for the effective management of the service.

The team will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, and the Prime Minister's efficiency adviser, Sir Peter Levene, before the end of March 1996 with recommendations for implementation within two years.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the services of (a) chiropodists, (b) dieticians, (c) medical laboratory scientists, (d) occupational therapists, (e) orthoptrists, (f) physiotherapists, (g) radiographers and (h) speech therapists are categorised as clinical services for the purposes of the private finance initiative in the NHS. [3341]

Mr. Horam: There is no requirement upon national health service trusts to include these services as part of the testing of private finance options. But these are matters for local determination and cannot be decided without the support of local clinicians.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service trusts in England are developing plans to use the PFI to care for acutely mentally ill patients. [3220]

Mr. Horam: To ensure that national health service capital projects meet NHS needs as cost effectively as possible, the option of using private finance initiative, under this Government's private finance initiative, must be considered for every potential capital project. Formulation of plans for projects to meet local needs is the responsibility of NHS trusts and health authorities. The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the principal differences between the private finance initiative schemes which may be developed with public finance if no suitable private capital can be raised and those which may be developed only if private capital can be raised; and if he will make a statement. [3476]

Mr. Horam: To ensure that national health service capital projects meet NHS needs as cost-effectively as possible, the option of using private finance, under this Government's private finance initiative, must be considered for every potential capital project. In the event that private capital is unobtainable for a particular scheme, public capital funding will be considered.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the nature, value and location of all private finance initiative projects in the NHS with a project value of £1 million or more which have been approved to date. [3475]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 6 November at columns 622–23.

One further project with a capital value greater than £1 million has been approved:

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level and percentage of trust income in each region received from non-national health service sources in each year since 1991–92. [3258]

Mr. Horam: The information for 1994–95 is shown in the table. Information from previous years is not available centrally.

Non-national health service income for trusts in England by region—1994–95

Birth Certificates

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to bring forward legislation to implement the restrictions on access to birth certificates outlined in the White Paper, Cm 939, "Registration: Proposals for Change. [3428]

Mr. Horam: This proposal was part of a wide package of reforms to the system for registering births, marriages and deaths in England and Wales. The Government remain committed to introducing the necessary legislation to implement these reforms as soon as a suitable opportunity occurs.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the 1996–97 hospital and community health services revenue allocations for the new health authorities. [3479]

Mr. Dorrell: Actual allocations cannot be made until the new health authorities come into existence on 1 April 1996. For planning purposes general allocations based largely on 1 April 1995 boundaries are given in the table.

Community Care

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to announce the allocations of community care special transitional grant to each social services authority in England for 1996–97. [3482]

Mr. Dorrell: I am today publishing indicative allocations showing each English social services authority's share of the special transitional grant for community care in 1996–97. The STG for 1996–97 will be £418 million, bringing to over £2.25 billion the total additional resources provided to local authorities for their new community care responsibilities. As last year, the whole of the STG will be distributed on the basis of personal social services standard spending assessments. Authorities have until 12 January 1996 to make representations about their proposed allocations. A copy of the circular is being placed in the Library.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific grants and capital resources he is making available to local authorities for personal social services for 1996–97. [3480]

Mr. Dorrell: Specific grants will again be available in 1996–97 as follows:

	£ million
Mental illness services	58.3
HIV and AIDS services	13.7
Services for alcohol and drugs misusers	2.5
Guardians ad litem and reporting officers	6.3
Social services training	35.5

Each grant will continue to support a maximum of 70 per cent. of total expenditure.

The mental illness grant is planned to increase by a further £9 million in 1997–98. The grant will be targeted on people with severe mental illness.

The capital grant for secure accommodation for young people will be £27.2 million in 1996–97.

Annual capital guidelines of £96.6 million will be notified to local authorities. Supplementary credit approvals will again be available for mental illness services—£11.6 million—and AIDS and HIV services—£3.1 million. The credit approval for information technology has been phased out.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for health what resources are being provided through the standard spending assessment for social services for 1996–97. [3481]

Mr. Dorrell: A total of £6911.6 million will be distributed by the personal social services standard spending assessment in 1996–97, compared with £6212.7 million in 1995–96. Total standard spending on social services, including specific and special grants, will be £7446.5 million in 1996–97, compared with £6965.9 million in 1995–96 an increase of 6.9 per cent.

GP Numbers

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of general practitioners in (a) 1990 and (b) 1994. [3755]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the list.

1 October 1990: 25,622

1 October 1994: 26,567

The data relate to unrestricted principals in England.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2977]

Mr. Horam: The Department is taking forward work aimed at seeking accreditation as an investor in people by October 1996; the formal commitment was made in December 1994.

Hospitals (Smoking)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his policy on the provision of smoking rooms for the use of patients, staff and visitors within NHS hospitals; [2966]

(2) how many employees of the Rotherham hospital trust signed a petition seeking the provision of a smoking room at Rotherham district general hospital; and what account he took of the petition before he wrote to the hon. Member for Wentworth recently on this subject; [2970]

(3) under what regulation Rotherham general hospital has barred a person from smoking in his own motor vehicle in the car park at the hospital; and what guidance he has issued on that matter; [3021]

(4) what advice was sought from the South Yorkshire fire service in regard to the prohibition of smoking by the Rotherham hospital trust; [2961]

(5) what considerations underlay (a) his approval of the ban on smoking at Rotherham district general hospital and (b) his Department's letter to the hon. Member for Wentworth in respect of the provision of smoking rooms in hospitals. [3024]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health issued guidance in 1992 (HSG(92)14), copies of which are available in the Library, to all national health service authorities and trusts, in line with the "Health of the Nation" White Paper, requesting that they implement policies to enable the national health service to become smoke free. Whilst the guidance sets out the basic requirements, detailed implementation is the responsibility of individual authorities and trusts. It is therefore for local managers and clinicians to decide whether they feel it necessary or practicable to set aside smoking rooms for staff and patients.

Information on an individual national health service trust's implementation of these policies is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. A. Baker, chairman of Rotherham General Hospitals national health service trust, for details of the trust's policy.

Bed Availability

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, concerning criteria for determining the number of beds per unit of population provided by district health services, what is the basis of his determination of the allocation of (a) revenue and (b) capital expenditure derived from public or private funds. [3355]

Mr. Horam: Allocation of hospital and community health services revenue to health authorities is determined by a national weighted capitation formula. Its aim is to enable health authorities to purchase similar levels of health services for resident populations in similar need.

A proportion of publicly provided capital is allocated to trusts to provide for the maintenance of their existing estate and routine replacement of equipment. Proposals for new capital schemes have to be supported by a business case which must demonstrate that private finance has been fully considered. Where private finance is not best value for money public funds can be made available.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were detained under the provisions of (a) the Mental Health Act 1983 and (b) other acts in (i) NHS hospitals, (ii) private and (iii) private nursing homes in each of the last five years. [3344]

Mr. Bowis: Information available centrally is on the number of admissions under the Mental Health Act 1983 to national health service hospitals and private hospitals and private nursing homes and is published in the statistical bulletin "In-Patients Formally Detained in Hospitals Under the Mental Health Act 1983 and other Legislation, England: 1987–88 to 1992–93", copies of which are available in the Library.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the service areas that have been or are planned to be market-tested. [3346]

Mr. Horam: A list of services where one or more trusts have either completed a market test or plan to market test is as follows.

1. There is no standard definition of services or list of services within the NHS and those listed above relate to Provider Units' interpretation.

2. Service headings such as "Hotel Services" and "Facilities Management" include a wide and varying range of individual services e.g. catering, portering, security car parking. Again there is no set pattern of which service make up Hotel Services etc., but relates to individual Provider Units' interpretation.

NHS Finance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) surpluses and (b) deficits were recorded by each different health authority by region, in each of the last three years. [2951]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 28 November 1995]: The information requested from the annual accounts, for the last three years will be placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Invoices

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average length of time it takes for his Department to pay invoices. [938]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 22 November 1995]: In common with most organisations, MAFF, including the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Veterinary Laboratory Agency, agrees payment terms with its suppliers in advance of orders being placed. The accounts payable system is designed to make payments only when they are due, in accordance with those terms. Thus, the average length of time it takes to pay an invoice is dependent on prior agreement with suppliers. Data emerging from the payments system indicate that 85.41 per cent. of all payments made by MAFF during the first quarter of 1995–96 were paid by the due date.

The chief executives of the Pesticides Safety Directorate, Meat Hygiene Service, Central Science Laboratory and ADAS will reply directly to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (i) orders and (ii) firms are represented by the 10.5 per cent. of invoices not paid by his Department within 30 days or in accordance with contractual agreements in 1994–95; and how many of those are related to firms with fewer than 500 employees. [914]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 22 November 1995]: The information requested is not available. During 1994–95, MAFF was in the process of installing a new computerised payments system and, as a result, consistent statistically valid data on prompt payment performance could not be collected. Currently, MAFF, including the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, the Veterinary Laboratory Agency and ADAS, does not identify separately payment performance data relating to firms with fewer than 500 employees, although this possibility is one of a number of enhancements to the systems now under consideration.

The chief executives of the Meat Hygiene Service, the Central Science Laboratory and the Pesticides Safety Directorate will reply directly to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his Department publicises payment practices other than as percentages of invoices paid late. [952]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 22 November 1995]: With effect from the 1995 report published in March 1995, Cm 2803, MAFF's, including the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Veterinary Laboratory Agency, payment practices, including its prompt payment objectives, are published in its departmental annual report. Now that the new computerised payments system is operational, future annual reports will include data on prompt payment performance.

The chief executives of the Pesticides Safety Directorate, the Meat Hygiene Service, the Central Science Laboratory and ADAS will reply directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 22 November 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your questions about payment of invoices.

I would refer you to the answer I gave on 3 November to your earlier questions on this subject (Official Report, Cols. 507–508 refer). In line with Government policy and normal terms of trade, PSD operates a prompt payment policy and aims to settle invoices within 30 days of receipt. Our records show that so far during 1995/96 98% of valid invoices have been paid within this timescale. We publicised our payment policy in our 1994/95 Annual Report and Accounts and our payment performance will be included in future Annual Reports.

Letter from Phillip Needham to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 30 November 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply directly to you concerning your Parliamentary Question (PQ 29) in which you asked the average length of time it takes for this Agency to pay invoices.[938]

In line with good commercial practice, ADAS agrees payment terms with its suppliers in advance of orders being placed. Our payment system is designed to make payments only when they are due, in accordance with those terms. The average length of time it takes to pay an invoice is currently 32 days.

Letter from Phillip Needham to Mrs Barbara Roche, dated 30 November 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture has asked me to reply directly to you concerning your Parliamentary Question (PQ 32) in which you asked how this Agency publicises payment practices.[952]

The terms of payment are reproduced on the back of the purchase order which is sent to the supplier. Additionally, our payment policy appears on page four of the ADAS Annual Report and Accounts 1994/95.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 30 November 1995:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service, I have been asked to respond to your questions regarding payment of invoices in respect of this Agency. As I stated in my letter to you of 3 November 1995 (Official Report column 507), the MHS is keen to pay invoices for all its suppliers on time. In particular, payment to vets that we contract much of our work to, many of which are small practices, have all been paid within agreed timescales since 1 April this year when this Agency was launched. These payments account for 78% of the value of our supplier invoices.[938], [914+952]

As we were only launched in April this year, your supplementary question to those I answered in my earlier letter, regarding the number of orders and firms affected by non-payment within 30 days, is not applicable to this Agency.

Concerning your final question about publication of payment practices, the Meat Hygiene Service intends to include this information in its first and subsequent set of annual accounts, when these are published after our first year of operation.

Letter from Professor P. I. Stanley to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 30 November 1995:

You asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food three separate questions relating to the payment of invoices. The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) became a MAFF executive agency in April 1992 and the Minister has asked me to reply to you in respect of the Agency as these are operational matters for which I am responsible.

Firstly, our most recent data shows that the average length of time taken by the Agency to pay invoices, from the date of the invoice to the date of payment, is 23 days.

Secondly, in 1994–95 some 10% of CSL invoices were not paid within 30 days of the invoice date. This represented approximately i) 1,000 orders and ii) 300 firms. I am unable to confirm the number relating to firms with fewer than 500 employees as this information is not available.

Finally, it is my intention in future to publicise the Agency's payment practices in our Annual Report and Accounts.

Intervention Stores (Beef)

Mr. Martin Redmond: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by location, the current cost of the stock of beef held in intervention stores; and what the figure was (a) 12 months and (b) 24 months ago. [2321]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the question concerns matters which are direct responsibility of the chief executive of the Intervention Board Executive Agency. I have asked him to reply directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from George Trevelyan to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your written Parliamentary Question (64) tabled for answer on 27 November 1995. [2321]

"To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will list by location, the current cost of stock of beef held in intervention stores; and what the figure was (a) 12 months and (b) 24 months ago."

Member States are required annually to submit to the Commission a Stock Account showing the value of beef stocks held in intervention stores as at 30 September. The information set out in the attached table lists the locations of stores that held stocks of beef for the years in question. A breakdown of the costs of stocks by location is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost because the book value of the stock at any particular time is assigned under EC accounting conventions to the stockholding at a national level. The value of the stocks held in the UK on 30 September in each year was:

1993: £87,575,989

1994: £31,473,031

1995[1]: £6,003,333

[1] provisional.

I am sending a copy of this letter, together with a copy of the table to the House of Commons Library and the Public Information Office.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken by his Ministry to prevent the falsification by farmers of documentation regarding BSE infected cattle. [2669]

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry requires that ear tag numbers of all cattle being moved to a market, or presented for slaughter, and which are accompanied by farmers' declarations, are checked by an official veterinary surgeon against the Ministry's central record of BSE cases. Enforcement as regards false documentation is a matter for local authorities, but prosecution is actively encouraged by the Ministry.

Official veterinary surgeons have also been asked to be alert for any indication of possible fraud, such as the replacement of ear tags, and to inform a divisional veterinary manager of the State Veterinary Service of any suspicion they have so that the circumstances can be investigated.

Baby Milk Formula

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the reports received from the inquiry panel established by the local authority co-ordinating body on trading standards to investigate alleged infringements of the Baby Milk Infant Formula and Follow-on Formula Regulations 1995; what steps he will take to establish uniformity in the enforcement approach; and if he will make a statement. [2530]

Mrs. Browning: No such inquiry panel exists. The Department of Health, in consultation with representatives of health professions, voluntary groups, baby milk manufacturers and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, is drawing up guidelines, as required by the regulations, on the donation of informational and educational materials produced by infant formula manufacturers and retailers. The guidance notes will shortly be circulated to interested parties for comment. In addition, LACOTS is preparing guidance on the implementation and interpretation of the regulations.

The two documents will assist enforcement officers in local authorities to achieve a uniform approach in the enforcement of the regulations.

TRANSPORT

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2985]

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport is committed to taking forward investor in people progressively.

The Department's executive agencies are progressively implementing investor in people at a pace relating to their own circumstance.

Three pilot schemes have been developed in the central transport unit. Of these the marine accident investigation branch has submitted its investors in people portfolio to Hants training and enterprise council.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oil tankers over (a) 10,000 tonne net registered tonnage, (b) 20,000 tonne net registered tonnage, (c) 50,000 tonne NRT and (d) 100,000 tonne NRT visited British ports in 1993 and 1994; and how many were fitted with double hulls. [2852]

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

Gross registered tonnage	1993	1994
Over 10,000	4,341	4,412
Over 20,000	2,435	2,513
Over 50,000	1,221	1,284
Over 100,000	140	133

Figures for net registered tonnage—NRT—and the number of double hull oil tankers are not available. As the regulations requiring new oil tankers to be fitted with double hulls, or similar structures, have only recently been introduced, the majority of existing oil tankers have single hulls.

Airports

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those airports that are equipped with distance measuring equipment in England and Wales. [2853]

Mr. Norris: The following aerodromes in England and Wales are equipped with distance measuring equipment

National Express

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much National Express was sold for on privatisation; and what is its current stock market value. [3252]

Mr. Norris: The net proceeds to the National Bus Company from the sale of its subsidiary, National Express, in 1988 was £10.1 million. My Department does not hold details of its current stock market value but the present National Express Group bears no resemblance to the original company sold by NBC.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Bus concerning the payment of sums of money as gifts to the former chairman of National Express. [3336]

Mr. Norris: None. Any financial transactions between business partners of companies in the private sector are matters for them.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints about vehicles emitting excessive exhaust fumes have been referred to the Vehicles Inspectorate in each of the last five years. [3471]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate executive agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 30 November 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of complaints about vehicles emitting excessive exhaust fumes referred to the Vehicle Inspectorate in each of the last 5 years.

We cannot quantify the total number of complaints received on smoke emissions; many complaints made are on an ad hoc basis and do not exclusively deal with excessive exhaust fumes. However, since 1991 the Vehicle Inspectorate has run a system where members of the public can ring the "Smoky Vehicle Hotline" and report commercial vehicles seen producing excessive amounts of exhaust smoke.

The total number of reports received via the Hotline for the past 5 years were:

1991/92: 1,483

1992/93: 2,481

1993/94: 2,887

1994/95: 8,113

April to October 1995: 11,861

Light Rail Funding

Sir Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the Manchester passenger transport authority's strategic development plan; if he will make a statement on the future of light rail funding; and what assessment he has made of the benefits which would arise from extending Metrolink. [3374]

Mr. Norris: I refer to the replies I gave on Friday 24 November to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), Official Report columns 349–50.

Vehicle Pollution

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to require local authorities to carry out spot checks for polluting vehicles. [3466]

Mr. Norris: We are currently consulting interested parties on how best to implement in practice enabling regulations which could be made under the provisions of section 87 of the Environment Act 1995 to permit local authorities, with police support, to carry out emissions checks on vehicles using the road.

Channel Tunnel Freight

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate (a) the volume of goods currently being shipped by security approved freight forwarders by rail through the channel tunnel per week and (b) the volume being shipped by road and ferry because of the restrictions imposed by the Channel Tunnel (Security) Order 1994; and if he will make a statement. [2684]

Mr. Watts: The average number of containers from security approved channel tunnel freight forwarders carried through the channel tunnel for the month of October 1995 was over 260 per week.

Decisions on the means of transport are commercial ones for the shipper concerned.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Refugees

16. Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the projected number of child refugees entering the United Kingdom during 1995; and if he will make a statement. [1370]

Mr. Kirkhope: It is estimated that some 600 unaccompanied children will claim asylum in the United Kingdom in 1995.

Private Prisons

17. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions he has given to private prisons regarding H.O. Reg. 20/1989. [1371]

Miss Widdecombe: Prison Department circular instruction 20/89 was superseded by the Prison Service policy on caring for the suicidal as set out in instruction to governors 1/94. Contractors responsible for privately managed prisons are expected to have arrangements which are consistent with this policy.

Probation Service

18. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to restructure the probation service. [1372]

Mr. Sackville: To reinforce court and public confidence in the probation service's work, my right hon. and learned Friend has this year published both revised national standards for community sentences, and the Green Paper, "Strengthening Punishment in the Community", aimed at restructuring community punishment. In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend has recently announced new arrangements reforming the qualifying training and recruitment of probation officers.

Law and Order, Lichfield

19. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit Lichfield to discuss law and order; and if he will make a statement. [1374]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to visit Lichfield. We should congratulate Staffordshire police force on the 13 per cent. reduction in burglary and the 7 per cent. reduction in vehicle crime recorded by them in the 12 months to June 1995.

Prisoners (Drugs)

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what percentage of British prisons illegal drugs have been detected in the last year. [1376]

Mrs. Widdecombe: Illegal drugs have been detected in all but two Prison Service establishments in England and Wales during the period 1 November 1994 to 31 October 1995.

This means that drugs have been detected in 98.5 per cent. of establishments.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the number of prisoners using drugs. [1375]

Miss Widdecombe: It is too early in the implementation of mandatory drug testing to be able to give an accurate assessment of the number of prisoners misusing drugs.

Figures from the eight first phase sites show 36 per cent. confirmed positive drug tests, but this cannot be extrapolated to the total population.

Asylum Seekers

22. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account he takes of the likely safety of asylum applicants if returned to Sri Lanka when deciding such applications; and if he will make a statement. [1377]

Mr. Kirkhope: All applications for asylum, regardless of nationality, are carefully considered in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees. Each case is assessed on its merits taking account of all the circumstances, including conditions in the country of origin.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of in-country applications for asylum are made within (a) one week of the applicant entering the country, (b) two to three weeks of entering the country, (c) three to four weeks of entering the country, (d) two to six months of entering the country and (e) more than six months of entering the country; and if he will make a statement. [2348]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 29 November 1995]: Information regarding the length of time between arrival date and application date, for those who enter the United Kingdom as visitors but subsequently claim asylum, is given in the table.

Average time taken[1] to apply for asylum by persons granted leave to enter the United Kingdom as visitors, January to September 1995

Period of time between arrival and application	Percentage
0 to 2 weeks	27
2 to 4 weeks	10
1 to 2 months	10
2 to 6 months	27
over 6 months	26
Total	100

[1] Estimated.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of applicants for asylum (a) excluding and (b) including dependants, for each calendar month from January 1990, with totals for each year. [3227]

Mr. Kirkhope: Annual figures for the number of asylum applications both excluding and including dependants for the years 1984 to 1994 are given in table 1.2 of Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom" issue 15/95, a copy of which can be found in the Library. Table 2.3 of this publication gives monthly figures for the number of principal applications in 1994 and the first quarter of 1995. Equivalent information for 1991 to 1993 is given in issues 12/92, 19/93 and 17/94 of the same publication which can also be found in the Library. Monthly application figures for years prior to 1991, and monthly application figures including dependants, are not available.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of persons who applied for political asylum who (a) were not admitted, (b) were admitted on a temporary basis, (c) had their applications refused, and (d) had their applications accepted, in each year between 1988 and 1994. [3142]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 28 November 1995]: Information is given in table 1.1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issue 15/95 on applications for asylum, split by those on arrival at a United Kingdom port of entry and those who applied "in country" after having been admitted to the United Kingdom for some reason under immigration rules, and on the number of decisions made on asylum applications, split by type of decision. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Those applying for asylum on arrival at a United Kingdom port maybe granted temporary admission pending the outcome of their application or, depending on the individual circumstances of the case, detained. Separate information on this is not available.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for political asylum are currently undecided. [1365]

Miss Widdecombe: As at 31 October this year, there were 66,665 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom outstanding.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently being held in prisons; and at what annual cost to public funds. [2497]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 21 November 1995, a total of 776 persons who had at some stage sought asylum were detained. Of these, 378 were detained in Prison Service establishments, including 253 at locations used almost exclusively for housing asylum detainees. These figures include people awaiting removal following refusal of their applications as well as those whose applications were under consideration or subject to appeal.

The Prison Service does not separate out costs according to the category of inmate but in 1993–94, the latest period for which published figures are available, the net operating cost per prisoner place in local prisons and remand centres was £21,400.

Prison Places

23. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the number of available places in British prisons; and if he will make a statement. [1378]

Miss Widdecombe: On Monday 20 November 1995, the certified normal accommodation available for use in prison establishments in England and Wales was 51,185 places.

Police

24. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from the Association of Chief Police Officers on the likely impact of the Budget on the service it delivers. [1379]

Mr. Maclean: None. Detailed proposals for police funding in England and Wales in 1996–97 will be announced later today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase police strength in the next year; and if he will make a statement. [1360]

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister has pledged additional funding to enable chief constables in England and Wales to recruit an extra 5,000 officers over the next three years. The details of police funding proposals for 1996–97 will be announced later today.

Metropolitan Police

25. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are currently on the beat in the metropolis; at what cost to public funds; what were the figures in May 1979 in real terms; and if he will make a statement. [1380]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, at the end of July 1995, there were 12,055 police officers on patrol in the Metropolitan police district—6,002 of these were assigned to foot patrol duties. The cost of this function is £502,482,000 per annum—£246,216,000 for foot patrol officers.

Comparable figures are not available for 1979.

Under-age Gambling

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of under-16-year-olds who regularly play fruit machines; and if he will make a statement. [1969]

Mr. Kirkhope: Statistics on the use of gaming machines are not available.

We have not carried out recent research on the subject but we understand that an independent survey of school children was carried out this summer drawn from 12 schools in the east, north-east and south-west of England. Out of 1,665 pupils aged 12 to 15, 10 per cent. said that they played fruit machines at least once a week.

Prison Accommodation, Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions during 1995 each of the prisons at (a) Cardiff, (b) Swansea and (c) Usk have exceeded the certified normal accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [2167]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 30 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of occasions during 1995 each of the prisons at (a) Cardiff, (b) Swansea and (c) Usk have exceeded the certified normal accommodation.

Cardiff and Swansea prisons have had populations in excess of certified normal accommodation available for use throughout 1995. The latest monthly information available shows that Usk prison had a population in excess of the certified normal accommodation available for use at the end of each of the last 8 months (March to October).

Population pressures in South Wales will be eased considerably when new accommodation comes into use at Cardiff in May/June 1996 (204 places) and at Swansea in August 1996 (103 places). A new prison at Bridgend is planned to come into use in 1997–98 and will provide about 600 new places.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions remand prisoners committed by courts in Wales have been held in prisons outside Wales for each of the last three full years for which figures are available and for 1995 to the latest available date; and what percentage this figure constitutes of the total number of remand prisoners committed by the same courts. [2168]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 30 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking, on how many occasions remand prisoners committed by courts in Wales have been held in prisons outside Wales for each of the last three full years for which figures are available and for 1995 to the latest available date; and what percentage this figure constitutes of the total number of remand prisoners committed by the same courts.

The available information relates to the number of remand prisoners who were first received into a Prison Service establishment in England from a court in Wales and is given in the attached table. The number of occasions when remand prisoners committed by courts in Wales, who were first held in a Welsh prison and subsequently transferred on remand to a prison in England, is not available.

Fire Authorities

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has received from HM chief inspector of fire services on the effects of the 1995 financial settlement for fire authorities on fire brigade response times. [1373]

Mr. Kirkhope: In general, brigades remain able to meet the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover—which include the response times that fire brigades are expected to maintain. Her Majesty's inspectors of fire services draw attention to any exceptions in the course of their annual inspection of brigades. It is for the fire authority concerned to take the appropriate action in any such case.

Investors in People

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to achieve investor in people status; when it started the process; when it expects to achieve investor in people status; and if he will make a statement. [2978]

Mr. Howard: The Home Office is fully committed to achieving accreditation as an investor in people. Action to this end is under way throughout the various agencies and other constituent parts of the Department, reflecting the different needs of each area and the different lengths of time each has been working towards the standard. Some parts of the Department have already reached the standard and others are expected to be ready for assessment within the next 12 months.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charges made under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 have been contested in court; how many appeals have been lodged; and what is his estimate of the total cost to public funds of the implementation of this measure. [2963]

Mr. Kirkhope: Detailed information is not collected centrally on numbers of persons charged for offences, nor about pleas and subsequent appeals. However, 2,811 persons were prosecuted for offences under the Dangerous Dogs Act between 1992 and 1994; in the same period 1,226 were found guilty, and a further 597 were cautioned.

Information on the cost to the police, local authorities, the Crown Prosecution Service, and the courts of operating the Dangerous Dogs Act is not held centrally.

Mr. Colin Ivor Dunning

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the application for the case of Mr. Colin Ivor Dunning to be referred to the Court of Appeal under the provisions of section 17 of the Criminal Appeals Act 1968. [3173]

Mr. Kirkhope: Representations were received from Mr. Dunning's solicitors on 3 February 1994. Supplementary representations were received in May 1995.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to questions put in correspondence from the solicitors acting for Mr. Colin Ivor Dunning. [3174]

Mr.Kirkhope: Officials have written to the solicitors with our decisions on Mr. Dunning's case and the reasons for that decision.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to give a decision in the case of Mr. Colin Ivor Dunning. [3175]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have written to the hon. Member with our decision today.

Bingo

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for deregulating the bingo industry. [1353]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are reviewing the present controls on bingo clubs as part of the Government's deregulation initiative.

Asylum and Immigration

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on asylum and immigration; how many were (a) in favour and (b) opposed to further changes to existing legislation; and if he will make a statement. [1366]

Miss Widdecombe: In the period 1 June to 23 November 1995, we received 634 representations from hon. Members on matters which relate broadly to asylum and immigration policy, including our proposals for further legislative and other measures. It is not possible to break down this figure in the form requested.

Migration (Former Yugoslavia)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 291–92, if he will specify the immigration rules relating to private medical treatment; if he will list the applications received by his Department from the International Organisation for Migration the Child Advocacy International for children to be brought from former Yugoslavia, indicating a date and the number of children; and if he will make a statement. [3386]

Mr. Kirkhope: In order to qualify under the immigration rules for private medical treatment in the United Kingdom, an applicant must demonstrate that satisfactory arrangements for the treatment have been made, that there are sufficient private funds available to meet the costs of the treatment, and that he intends to leave the United Kingdom at the end of the treatment.

The arrangements between International Organisation for Migration and Child Advocacy International concern the evacuation of nationals of Bosnia-Herzegovina, who require visas in order to travel to the United Kingdom. Visa applications must be made at a British diplomatic post abroad, which is a matter for my right hon. Friend and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Immigration, Asylum and Nationality (Legislation)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the date of the first reading of each Bill introduced by Her Majesty's Government since 1979 relating to immigration, asylum, nationality or a related topic; and if he will indicate in respect of each the date of publication, and where relevant, command numbers of any Green Papers, White Papers or consultative documents relating thereto. [3343]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is as follows:

British Nationality Act 1981

Date for First Reading: 13 January 1981

White Paper: July 1980, Cmnd 7987[1]

British Nationality (Falkland Islands) Act 1983 (introduced as a private Member's Bill)

Date of First Reading: 4 November 1992

British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1985

Date of First Reading: 10 January 1985

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Date of First Reading: 4 March 1987

Immigration Act 1988

Date of First Reading: 5 November 1987

British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990

Date of First Reading: 4 April 1990

Asylum Bill (1992)

Date of First Reading: 1 November 1991

Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993

Date of First Reading: 22 October 1992

[1] This followed a Green Paper in April 1977, Cmnd 6795.

Parliamentary Constituency Boundaries

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Boundary Commission intends to conduct an interim review of parliamentary constituencies in England. [3943]

Mr. Howard: The commission has informed me that it intends to consider making a report on parliamentary constituencies in Hereford and Worcester and the west midlands, and also in Essex and the London borough of Redbridge and of Waltham Forest. The commission intends to commence forthwith an interim review of parliamentary constituencies in each of those areas.

Police Grant

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce the allocations of police grant for individual police authorities in 1996–97 and the allocations of the funding for 5,000 extra officers announced by the Prime Minister; and if he will make a statement on the impact of these allocations on the overall funding of police authorities in that year. [3944]

Mr. Howard: I have today put a copy of my proposals for the allocation of police grant for 1996–97 in the Library. I intend to implement these proposals subject to consideration of any representations I receive about them.

The police service has indicated its support in principle for the continued distribution of police grant in accordance with a needs-based formula, and I am therefore proposing to continue to allocate the greater part of police grant according to the police funding formula.

I am, however, proposing a number of detailed changes to the formula in response to the representations which have been made to me about the working of the formula. The principal changes which I am proposing are:

an increase in the share of available funding allocated by the formula's pensions indicator from 9 per cent. to 12.3 per cent.;

a reduction in the share of available funding allocated by the formula's establishment indicator from 50 to 40 per cent.; and, the introduction into the formula of a sparsity indicator to allocate 0.5 per cent. of available funding.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has announced funding for 5,000 extra police officers over the public expenditure survey period and an additional £20 million of police grant has been made available in 1996–97. I am proposing to allocate the £20 million according to the daytime and resident populations of each police force area.

I am also aware of, and share, public concern that policing levels generally should be maintained. I therefore propose to apply an additional rule to police grant allocations which would ensure that each police authority other than the Metropolitan police can receive 3 per cent. more funding in 1996–97 than it could have received in 1995–96. For the Metropolitan police, the cap on its reserves will be lifted allowing it to carry forward the substantial extra reserves it has accumulated during 1995–96.

The 3 per cent. additional rule, and the extra freedom to carry forward reserves for the Metropolitan police, are both in addition to the £20 million which has been made available in relation to the Prime Minister's announcement concerning additional officers.

Other police funding proposals within the local government finance system are being announced today by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales.

The table shows by police force area the total effect of all these proposals for 1996–97. It also shows the allocations approved by Parliament for 1995–96.

[3] Figure for the City does not include capital and other services block SSAs which are allocated to the Common Council of the City of London as a whole in respect of all its functions.[4] Figures for South Wales and Gwent police authorities have been adjusted to show what they would have received in 1995–96 had the transfer of the Rhymney valley from south Wales to Gwent, due to take effect on 1 April 1996, been effective for 1995–96. These adjustments enable valid comparisons to be made between these forces' allocations for 1995–96 and 1996–97.

British Dependent Territory Passport Holders

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make the requirements for entry by British dependent territory passport holders from Montserrat to the United Kingdom, the same as for such people from Gibraltar and the Falklands. [3167]

Mr. Kirkhope: No.

Executive Agencies (Overseas Travel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of his executive agencies for the last financial year in respect of overseas travel by staff of the agency (a) the cost, (b) the countries visited and (c) the posts held by the staff involved. [2363]

Mr. Howard: The available information is as follows:

In the cases of the Prison Service and the Forensic Science Service, some of the overseas visits listed were funded by bodies other than these agencies, and for these visits, costs are not available:

Prison Service

cost: £62,106

Countries visited: Albania, Belarus, Croatia, Denmark, Poland, Holland, Hungary, Czech Republic, Germany, USA, Israel, Sweden, Russia, Romania, Spain, France, Italy, Belgium, Cambodia.

Posts: Senior staff from Prison Service Headquarters, Area Managers, Governors and Prison Officers.

United Kingdom Passport Agency

cost: £6,295

Countries visited: Canada, Zimbabwe, Australia.

Posts: Chief Executive, Director of Systems and Director of Operations.

Fire Service College

cost: £98,432

Countries visited: Portugal, Germany, Belgium, Luxembourg, Bahrain, Azerbaijan, Norway, West Indies, Abu Dhabi, France, Oman, Spain, USA, Hong Kong, China, Hungary, South Africa, Mauritius, India, Brunei, Malaysia, Austria, Indonesia, Vietnam, Thailand, Singapore, Australia, Philippines, Taiwan, Macau.

Posts: Chief Executive, Commandant, Dean, Sales and Marketing Director, International Sales and Marketing Manager, International Marketing Sales Executive, Teaching staff (Civil Service), Teaching staff (Fir Brigade seconded).

Forensic Science Service

Costs: £25,397

Countries visited: Sweden, USA, Germany, France, Portugal, Italy, Taiwan, India, Eire, Spain, Holland, South Africa, Singapore.

Posts: Chief Executive, Director of Operations, Director of Service Development, Drug Intelligence Unit, Research Scientists, caseworkers and team leaders.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the population in Doncaster prison will reach its design maximum within the next 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [2398]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1995.

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about whether the population in Doncaster prison will reach its design maximum within the next twelve months.

Doncaster prison has a certified normal accommodation level of 771 prisoners. This was reached within three months of it opening on 20 June 1995.

Prison Populations

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison for the latest date for which figures are available. [1359]

Miss Widdecombe: On Monday 20 November, a total of 52,297 prisoners were in custody in England and Wales.

Mr Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in (a) category A and (b) each sub-category of category A are currently held in prisons in England and Wales. [2472]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners in category A and each sub-category of category A held in prisons in England and Wales.

On 24 November 1995 there were 823 category A prisoners held in prisons in England and Wales with the following escape risk classifications:

Classification	Number of prisoners
Exceptional risk	16
High risk	157
Standard risk	650

Sex Offences (Tourism)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what intention Her Majesty's Government have of introducing extra-territorial legislation for sex crimes against children abroad, along the lines of that introduced by other western countries. [2002]

Mr. Maclean: We have made clear on previous occasions—12 July, Official Report, column 600—that we do not believe that legislation which extended the jurisdiction of our courts to enable them to deal with sexual offences committed against children abroad would be an effective way to tackle the problem of sex tourism. Accordingly, we have no plans to introduce such legislation although we continue to keep the matter under review.

Prisoners (Home Leave Offences)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are known to have committed further offences when on home leave. [185]

Miss Widdecome: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 30 November, 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners known to have committed further offences when on home leave.

Home leave as such and other temporary release schemes were replaced by a new system of release on temporary licence on 25 April this year.

Information about the number of prisoners who commit further offences while temporarily released is not recorded centrally, because of the practical difficulty in obtaining consistent and reliable information from police forces, both in this country and abroad, in time to be recorded on a prisoner's record. Due to the length of time that some cases can take to resolve within the judicial process, it is possible that some prisoners will have been discharged from prison by the time that information on further convictions becomes available.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 267

SESSION 1995–96

15th November—30th November 1995

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
